"Ralph Burke," said Montgomery reminiscently, evidently putting his thoughts into words. "It's close to fifteen years since I've seen him *

* * why, little Cleo must be almost a woman now * * * I wonder if she looks like her mother * *

" " Stepping across to a small safe, set in the wall, he gave the combination a few rapid turns and the steel door swung open. Opening one of the drawers Montgomery drew out a large, square envelope of blue linen.

"I wonder if I did right by Cleo," he mused aloud, staring at the envelope with unseeing eyes. So lost was he in meditation that he was quite oblivious to the fact that the door leading to the outer office had opened and that a young man, his footfalls deadened by the thickness of the carpet, had entered and stood beside

"I didn't hear you come in. I must have been talking to myself," he added, apologetically. Restoring the sealed envelope to the drawer from which he hed taken it, he swung shut the door of the safe, but failed to lock it. Returning to his desk, he picked up the letter from Washing-while I get a glass of water. I'm feeling a little dizzy . . . must be the heat . . . devilish hot today." The door had no sooner closed behind his uncle than Gerald Morton darted silently across the room, swung open the door of the safe and snatched out the blue envelope. "Not to be opened until my death. Calvin Montgomery," he read aloud. "Now I wonder what the devil is in that?" he muttered, examing the seals. "It certainly gave the old gentleman a jolt when I caught him looking at it.

And who on earth is Cleo?" At that instant footsteps sounded outside the door. Realizing the impossibility of concealing it on his person, Morton hastily returned the envelope to its drawer and closed the safe. Had Calvin Montgomery observed his nephew more closely, he would have noticed that his hands were shaking. "If this invention of Burke's is what Davis says it is, Gerald," he said, "we must get hold of it."

"But suppose he won't give us the option, Uncle Calvin?" asked Morton.

"Suppose he has already promised it to the government? What shall I do

"If he refuses," said Montgomery slowly, "give him this message." Tak-ing a card from his case, he wrote a few lines on it and handed it to his nephew. This is what the young man read: "Dear Ralph—I once gave you something that I valued as much as you value the secret of the submarine. Now is your chance to repay me. Calvin." When Hope reached Dr. Burke's private wharf the following morning, he found that the inventor and his daughter had arrived before him.

Miss Burke," said the young naval officer, bowing from the waist after the Annapolis fashion, "but this will be my first trip on one with a woman for a shipmate. Indeed, I imagine that you are the first woman in America to go down in a submarine."

"Perhaps you don't approve of women being permitted aboard war craft," laughed Cleo with a sugges-craft," laughed Cleo with a sugges-tion of coyness. "I approve of having you aboard, Miss Burke," said Hope, in open ad-miration. "With you for a mascot I feel certain that the experiment is going to prove successful." "When you two young people have finished throwing bouquets at each other," broke in the inventor, "we'll get started. Is the crew all aboard perin' together, an' the minute they saw me they went inside. P'r'aps the Jap's got another berth." "No matter," said the inventor impatiently, "we can get along without him. If everything is ready we will tirely to my oxygen-producing sys-tem," remarked Burke, as he followed his guest through the circular man-hole in the deck which gave access to the boat's interior. "I have utilized my spare moments in perfecting one or two other devices for use on submarines which may interest you. This arrangement for automatically opening and closing the hatchway is one of them." As he spoke he indi-cated a lever connected with steel rods which ran up to the hinged cover of the hatch through which they had just descended
