MACHINISTS PULL OFF EIGHT MORE

Visit Bertschy's Garage, Which Does More Than Auto Repair Work.

COFFEY IS EXPECTED HERE

The striking machinists of Omaha pulled off eight more men yesterday

These eight were machinists who had up to this time continued work in Bertschy's garage, Nineteenth and Harney streets. The machinists have not yet concerned themselves much with the work going on in shops that do a strictly automobile repair business, but there are many automobile repair shops that do much work in the machinists' line that is not strictly automobile repair. The machinists hold that Bertschy's place comes under this classification. There is also another phase to this situation. The Bertschy place was considered immediately when the machinists went out in various parts of the city several days ago. That was when the dissatisfied machinists were negotiating with the Employers' association, which was holding frequent meetings with regard to the machinist situation.

At that time the Bertschy people maintained that the Employers' association had no authority to act for them or negotiate for them, and that they would handle the trouble in their own case in their own way.

The Employers' association, however, insisted that they had authority to act for Bertschy, as well as for other employers of machinists. Thus the matter hung for several days, but when the Bertschy people would not meet the terms the ma-chinists are demanding, they went over and pulled the men off the job. In the strike of the building laborers, matters are still quiet, and no new demonstrations occurred.

State Labor Commissioner Frank

Coffey is expected to arrive soon for a conference with labor leaders and employers in Omaha with regardd to the situation.
