REAR ADMIRAL CARDALE IS TO LEAVE GREECE

(Correspondence of the Associated Press.) Athens, Greece, June 1.—It is announced that Rear Admiral Hubert S. Cardale, the acting head of the British naval mission in Greece and at present the ranking officer of the royal Hellenic navy on active service, will soon relinquish his post and leave Greece.

One day Admiral Cardale has been called upon to pronounce for the "King's party" and again, on the next day, to speak for the Venizelists, the adherents of the popular statesman who desired to see Greece take up arms against the central powers. The admiral appears to have been in a favorable mood of both King Constantine and Venizelos.

Dorothy Bernard and Stuart Holmes are featured today and tomorrow. Strand in a thrilling story showing the fallacy of free love, called "The Sins of Men." This story concerns the writing of a book which preaches rather daring doctrines, teaching a powerful lesson that "the wages of sin is death."

HAPPENINGS IN THE MAGIC CITY

Commencement Week at South Side High School Is Very Busy One.

SOMETHING ON EVERY DAY

Commencement week at South High school this year will be one of the liveliest on record. Beginning tomorrow night with the class banquet at the Loyal hotel the seniors have home sort of an event carded for each day.

The baccalaureate sermon will be delivered by Rev. Charles Hotter, new pastor at the Trinity Baptist church, Sunday evening in the high school auditorium at Forty-third and J streets. The class, forty-four students in number, will march in black caps and gowns—the historic procession. Monday evening brings the lawn party at the home of Miss Lucille Nitsche at her home.

Tuesday morning will find something new in the usual program of commencement events. A breakfast will be served either at Spring Lake park or at the home of one of the members. This is the particular idea of Miss Nitsche, chairman of the committee of arrangements for the commencement week dates.

Class Play Wednesday Night. The class play, "Green Stockings," comes on Wednesday evening. The auditorium stage will be used and doors will open at 7:30 o'clock. The hour of the opening of the play has been set at 8:15 o'clock. Dress rehearsal of actors will take place Tuesday evening.

A class picnic will be held Thursday afternoon and evening at Riverview park. Friday night comes the graduation at the Central high school auditorium. Despite the sentiments voiced against participating in joint graduation exercises with graduates of Central and Commerce High schools, the local seniors will have to do so.

Ralph Goldberg will entertain the class in its final class party Saturday evening at his home at twenty-third and J streets. The election of permanent officers will probably take place at this meeting. Harold Shainkoitz is president and Miss Marie Beatty secretary.

Honor Probably to Wirth. Principal Moore has not yet officially made known who will be the honor graduate, but it is conceded that Louis Wirth stands in first place. Wirth won second place in the state debating league championship tourney at Lincoln several weeks ago.

Mass Meeting Succeeds. Impersonators of Charles E. Hughes, Theodore Roosevelt, Woodrow Wilson, William Jennings Bryan and Uncle Sam held forth at a mass meeting of students and faculty in the South High school in the interests of the senior class play that is to be given next Wednesday evening, in such manner as to keep the audience in an uproar during the entire session.

Mandan Park Sunday. The entertainment committee of the Southeast Improvement club has arranged for a big picnic at Mandan park Sunday afternoon and evening. As a special attraction the Bohemian Ted Jed Sokol turners are going to give an exhibition. Foot races and wrestling matches will follow besides other public sports which will be staged by a ground committee. Refreshments will be served.

A Bellevue Dedication. The dedication of the Homan river ferry at Bellevue will take place this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. A large party of stockmen from the local market and farmers from the Iowa side will gather on the river bank and see the boat off on its first official trip. Homan, proprietor of the ferry, has been doing business for several days. People who wish to attend the dedication will take the Bellevue car and get off at the Sixteenth street crossing and follow the road east to the river. An invitation is issued to all.

Workmen Anniversary. Dr. R. L. Wheeler and G. R. Horacek, former member of the South Side Board of Education, were speakers at the thirtieth anniversary celebration of the Ancient Order of United Workmen lodge, held last evening in the local temple at Twenty-fifth and M streets. Horacek addressed the members in Bohemian for the benefit of a large number of members of that nationality. It was estimated that fully 1,000 members of Greater Omaha lodges were in attendance. Dancing and refreshments marked the program of the evening.

League City Gossip. The Independent Order of Red Men will give a grand ball at their hall at Twenty-fourth and O streets, Saturday evening, June 10. The public is invited. Tickets for the big open air tug of war tournament to be held in connection with the Centennial club festival on the nights of June 12, 13 and 14 at 8 o'clock, have been issued. The outlook is for a large attendance.

The Secret of the Submarine

By E. Alexander Powell

Author of "The End of the Trail," "Fighting in Flanders," "The Road to Glory," "Viva la France," etc.

THIRD INSTALLMENT.

SYNOPSIS. Lieutenant Jarvis Hope is detailed by the United States Naval board to investigate and report his findings on the invention of Dr. Ralph Burke, which serves to bring the submarine to a state of perfection. The lieutenant arrives in Valdivia and is welcomed by the inventor and his daughter, Cleo. On the trial trip of the inventor's boat, a Japanese helper is surprised in the act of examining the mechanism of the ventilating device. Hope reports favorably on the new device, but there are others interested in it. An attempt by Burglarize Dr. Burke's laboratory fails, but later Cleo finds him murdered in his bedroom.

(Continued from Yesterday.) "I see that the leaves of this ledger are detachable," remarked Olga. "As we are greatly pressed for time I wonder if you could not let me take the page which has the names we wish. I will have them copied and return the page to you in the morning."

"I am very sorry madam," said Mr. Dawson respectfully, "but the city ordinances require us to keep a list of those to whom we have made sales always in our possession. The police are very strict about this, as it often assists in tracing articles that have been stolen. Not that we are accustomed to deal with thieves," he added, smiling. "If you will wait but five minutes, madam, my secretary will copy the names for you."

Within a quarter of an hour after Olga and Sextus left the auction rooms with the list in their possession, a second taxicab drew up before Dawson's door. Gerald Morton entered. "I am a friend of Miss Cleo Burke," he explained to the auctioneer. "As she has been detained in Valdivia she asked me if I would drop in here and get the names of the people who bought some books about which she telephoned you."

"But some other friends of Miss Burke's have just been here after the same list," said Dawson. "They left with it not fifteen minutes ago." "Other friends of Miss Burke?" exclaimed Morton, plainly startled. "Who were they? What were their names?"

"It never occurred to me to ask their names," said Dawson. "There were two of them, a slender, foreign-looking man and a tall, dark, handsomely dressed woman. I imagine that she was a foreigner, too." "A tall, dark woman and a foreign-looking man," repeated Morton, making no effort to hide his perplexity. "I haven't the vaguest idea who they could be. Perhaps someone to whom Miss Burke telephoned after I left Valdivia. I'm afraid I've a reputation for being very careless and she was probably afraid that I would forget all about the list. Still, you had better let me have a copy of it so that I can prove to her that I'm not as forgetful as she imagines."

When he had departed a few minutes later, with the list in his pocket, Gerald Morton was a much puzzled man. Who could they be, these foreigners who had so suddenly obtruded themselves? At five minutes to six there stopped before the Dawson establishment a snorting motorcycle. Entered Satsuma, dust-covered and perspiring. "I have come to inquire about some books belonging to Miss Burke," he began, in the precise speech of the educated oriental, when Dawson interrupted him.

"You're another friend of Miss Burke's, I suppose?" he shouted. "I suppose that you've come to tell me that Miss Burke has been unavoidably detained and that she has asked you to obtain the names of the purchasers of the books, eh? I've stood for that story twice this afternoon but you can't come in here and put it over on me a third time." "What do you mean?" asked Satsuma, in undisguised astonishment. "I do not understand."

"I mean exactly what I say," shouted the exasperated auctioneer. "Half an hour ago in came a girl and a man who say that they are friends of Miss Burke and that she's sent them to get the names of the people who bought her father's books. I give them the names. Ten minutes later a young fellow arrives in a taxi and in a tearing hurry and tells me the same story. So I give the names to him. Now you come along and try to give me the same song and dance. It's too thin, my friend, it's too thin." "I am not a friend of Miss Burke," said Satsuma quietly, "and I know nothing of these other people. I wish to obtain the books for private reasons. If you will give me the names of the people who bought them I am quite willing to pay you for your trouble," and he displayed a $20 bill.

"Well, money talks," said Dawson, abruptly altering his tone, "and handed if I can see what harm there is in giving you the names. Sit down a minute while I copy them." When Satsuma left he was so absorbed in his speculations as to the identity of the mysterious strangers who had preceded him, that he failed to put out his cigarette-stub which he absent-mindedly tossed into the wastebasket standing beside Dawson's desk. And it being closing time, Dawson followed the Japanese out, and closed the door, and locked it, and betook himself homeward without noticing that from the wastebasket rose a thin, faint wisp of smoke.

Though the car in which Cleo, Hope and Hook were racing city-wards was not a large one, it made up for its lack of size by the extraordinary speed which Hope managed to coax from the Leving Valdivia behind them; they sped into the open country; past truck farms and vineyards and blossoming orchards they shot; past neat white farm houses, peering coyly out from amid their blazing gardens; past great ranches whose rolling acres were dotted with live oaks and carpeted with wild flowers; past more gardens, more farm houses, more orchards, until they reached a long down-grade where, for a dozen miles, the highway parallels the shore. As the empty road opened out before him, Hope stepped on the throttle and the car leaped forward like a thoroughbred which feels the jockey's spur. The speedometer needle showed that they were traveling at fifty miles an hour. The scenery was but a tiding haze of green. The telegraph poles sped by so quickly that they looked like the palings in a picket fence. Ahead of them there suddenly appeared, extending across a portion of the road, a rude barricade with a red flag and the sign "Danger!"

"They're repairing the road ahead but I guess that we can get through," Hope shouted in response to Cleo's warning as they shot by the barrier. Down the smooth-paved grade they thundered and then, as they unexpectedly as a slap in the face, there yawned before them a chasm, three-score feet across! The bridge was gone—evidently swept away by the spring floods. The road ended in a sheer precipice, and at the bottom of the precipice, forty feet below, swirled the river which had done the damage. Hope, his mind trained for emergencies, instantly realized that it was impossible to stop. The brakes would not work in time to prevent the car and its occupants from going over the brink into the stream below. To turn the car to one side was equally impossible, for the road was bordered by steep banks, to go down which meant certain death for all of them. Their only chance—a chance in a million—was to keep straight ahead in the slim, slim hope that the car, now traveling at terrific speed, would have sufficient momentum to clear the chasm. Tightening his grip upon the wheel, Hope jammed his foot against the accelerator. The light car was going so fast that it seemed as though its wheels no longer touched the ground. Hope could hear Hook screaming in his ear; out of the corner of his eye he caught a glimpse of Cleo, with blanched face and tight-clenched hands, beside him. Her lips were moving. Now only a score of feet separated them from the brink—ten feet—five feet—and the car sailed out into space as though fastened to the end of a mighty pendulum. Though the flight across the gulf occupied only a moment of time to the three in the car it seemed interminable. Though when the car reached the opposite bank it was ten feet above the level of the highway, it landed as smoothly as a leaping greyhound. Like a tennis ball it rebounded once, twice, thrice, and then, quite uninjured, but with three white-faced and shaking passengers, went tearing down the road in the direction of the distant city.

The clock hands on the campanile of the Ferry building in San Francisco pointed to a quarter after six when Hope, now traveling with more respect for speed laws, swung the car into Market street. He started to turn into Kearney street but stopped, at the signal of a traffic officer, to let a fire engine pass. It tore up Kearney street, its siren hooting a hoarse warning, and he followed it. Ahead dense clouds of smoke poured from the windows of a corner building. More fire apparatus was coming. Everyone was running. A policeman halted them with peremptory hand. "You can't come any further in your car," he ordered.

"I'll have to walk the rest of the way," said Hope, "but it isn't very far. Dawson's place is somewhere in the next block. By Jove, it must be close to where the fire is!" Pushing their way through the crowd, stumbling over the lines of fire hose, the three made their way forward until they were opposite the burning building. So dense was the smoke, however, that the building was totally obscured. Suddenly a gust of wind blew the curtain of smoke aside. As it did so

Cleo, Hope and Hook gave a groan of despair. For across the face of the doomed structure, in letters four feet high, they read, "Dawson's Auction Rooms." Even as they looked, there came a rending crash and amid a swirl of smoke and a sudden burst of flame, the walls tumbled and fell in. Somewhere amid that mass of smoking debris, charred beyond recognition now, was the ledger containing the names of those who had purchased the precious volumes. And in one of those volumes, now no longer traceable, was hidden the secret of the submarine.

(To Be Continued Tomorrow.) MISS LOTTA JOHNSON WINS TEMPERANCE PRIZE

Winners of the University of Omaha temperance essay contest were announced last evening at the seventh annual graduating exercises in John Jacob's Memorial hall. Miss Lotta Johnson was awarded first prize with a cash prize of $15 in gold and Mark Low second prize with a gold award of $10. Miss Lulu Miller as third best in the contest was given honorable mention. The essay contest was under the auspices of the local Women's Christian Temperance union and the money for the prizes given by Mrs. John Bekins, one of its members. By winning first place Miss Johnson will have the honor of representing the University of Omaha in the state contest. The state prize is a cash award of $25.

Every student of the University of Omaha English and Rhetoric departments competed for the prize. Miss Johnson is a freshman and has the honor of being the first year student to capture first place.

GREATEST BLOOD REMEDY

Gives Results While Others Fail Nature's Remedy for the Blood

The purifying and curative properties of Nature's great remedy have made "S. S. S. for the Blood" a household name. Thousands today enjoying perfect health owe their recovery from blood or skin diseases to this universally used blood purifier. S. S. S. is made entirely from roots, herbs and barks, which possess cleansing and healing ingredients. You cannot be well when your blood is impure; you lack strength and energy natural with health; your complexion becomes pale and sallow; your vitality is weakened. When waste or refuse matter, which Nature intends shall be thrown off, is left in the system, it is absorbed into the blood and boils, pimples, rashes, blotches and other eruptions of the skin appear. S. S. S. goes into the circulation and removes every particle of blood taint or poison of every character. All skin diseases and eruptions pass away, and the smooth clean skin, glowing with health shows that the body is being nourished by rich, pure blood. Rheumatism, Catarrh, Scrofula, Contagious Blood Poison, all are deep seated blood disorders, and for their treatment nothing equals S. S. S. Get S. S. S. at any drug store. GREAT BRITAIN EXTENDS SHIP BUILDING YARDS

(Correspondence of the Associated Press.) London, June 1.—The shipbuilding yards of Great Britain are gradually increasing their output of mercantile tonnage according to reports published in various papers, and in several instances building berths are being extended, new iron working sheds and engine shops erected, while large new buildings at present utilized for government work are expected to be available for mercantile construction in the near future. Several new vessels are near completion and one or two just completed on the Clyde. Extensive repair work is in progress also in most of the east and south coast yards, while the Belfast yards are said to be preparing for an early resumption of mercantile work. The dilution of the labor scheme on the Clyde has already commenced and a number of women have been assigned to suitable unskilled work. Want Ads never shirk their work—they will get results, if anything will.
