The Secret of Submarine

FOURTH INSTALLMENT.

was to judge by the dirty gray-white beard which reached almost to his waist, very old. But the suggestion of age was belied by the wonderfully piercing eyes which peered out at his visitors suspiciously from under heavily thatched brows.

"Is this Mr. Stephaniski?" Morton inquired politely.

"It iss," was the none too gracious answer. "Vot iss it dot you vish?"

"I have learned from Mr. Dawson," said Morton, "that you bought a work on chemistry at the auction this morning. I am a collector of scien-

Synopals.

Lieutenant Jarvia Hope is detailed by the United States naval board to investigate and report his findings on the invention of Dr. Raiph Burke, which serves to bring the submarine to a state of perfection. The lieutenant arrives in Valdavia and is welcomed by the inventor and his daughter, Cleo. On the trial trip of the inventor's boat a Japanese heiger is surprised in the set of examining the mechanism of the ventilating device. Hope reports favorably on the new device, but there are others interested in it. An attempt to burgiarise Dr. Burke's laboratory falls, but jater Cleo finds him murdered in his beforom. Cleo sells her father's liberary to get money, later she finds a note from which she learns that they contain the secret formula. With Hope she races to the successory. morning. I am a collector of scientific books and if this book is what I think it is, I would like to make you an offer for it. Could I have a look an offer for it. Could I have a look at it?"

"It iss true dot I had such a book this morgen purchased," was the answer. "I vill it to you show gladly. But first I must der room more presentable make," and he closed the door in their faces. Could they have looked within they would have seen Stephanski throw back the threadbare carpet which covered the floor of his little dining room and raise a trapdoor which evidently gave access to the cellar. Then moving always with caution he took from a work bench in the living room a round metal object about the size of a grapefruit, descended through the trapdoor into the cellar and placed it gently on a shelf upon which reposed a number of other globes precisely similar. Ascending to the dining room again he closed the trapdoor and drew the carpet over it. "I take it that you must be acquainted with Mr. Stephanski," he began, feeling his way cautiously, "or are you, too, on the trail of the Burke books?"
"What do you know about the Burke books," she demanded incredulously.
"I know all about them," replied "I know all about them," replied Morton, now convinced, from her agitation, that his surmises were correct. "And I happen to know," he continued, "that you are after them, too. Let us be quite frank with each other, dear lady. It is always more satisfactory and saves much misunderstanding. I am going to Stephanski's to get a look at this book which he bought at Dawson's auction sale this morning; you are going there for the same purpose. If we tried we could probably make things very un-

Ascending to the dining room again he closed the trapdoor and drew the carpet over it.

"Now," he said, reappearing at the front door, "der room more presentable looks. Will you come in?"

"This," continued Stephanski, "iss der book I haf this morgen purchased," and he indicated a large, leather-bound work on chemistry which was lying on the table.

With undisguised eagerness Morton threw it open, while Olga leaned over his shoulder. They went through it, page by page, from cover to cover; they held it up and shook it; they minutely examined the binding, but to no avail. There was no trace of the lost formula. Meanwhile Stephanski watched them narrowly, Olga, glancing up, happened to catch his eye. For a moment she stared at him unbelievingly; then:

"Ivan! Ivan Stephanski!" she cried, "don't you know me?"

For a long minute the old man returned her stare, searching her every feature; then recognition suddenly dawned.

"Olga!" he exclaimed, and, dronging on one knee, as a courtier first morning; you are going there for the same purpose. If we tried we could probably make things very uncomfortable for each other-but what's the use? Suppose we join forces instead? If we succeed in getting what we're after there will be enough in it to satisfy us both. What do you say?"

While he was speaking Olga's mind had been working like lightning.

"Very well," she assented, "I can see no harm in our working together. As you say, the secret, if we discover it, is big enough to satisfy us both." As a matter of fact, she had not the slightest intention of sharing the secret with anyone. For that matter, neither had Morton.

"Good," he exclaimed heartily."
"Now that we are to be partners per-

"Good," he exclaimed heartily.
"Now that we are to be partners permit me to introduce myself. My name is Gerald Morton."
"And I," she replied, gravely acknowledging the introduction, "am the Countess Ivanoff," Morton was obviously impressed by her title, her distinction of manner, and her undeniable beauty, but his reflections were interrupted by the car stopping in front of a tumbledown house which stood back from the road in a lot overgrown with grass and weeds. It was a peculiarly lonely and forbidding neighborhood, in the extreme western outskirts of the city, with houses few and far apart.
"This must be the place" said "Olga! Olga!" he exclaimed, and, dropping on one knee, as a courtier kneels to a queen, he pressed his lips to the Countess Ivanoff's hand. There ensued between the two an ex-cited dialogue in a language which Morton, though unable to understand it, recognized as Russian, and in which he caught frequently repeated, the word "Irkutsk."

She broke off suddenly and stood and far apart.

"This must be the place," said Morton, knocking. "It's the only house in the block." They heard from within the sound of someone moving about hurriedly, but it was not until Morton knocked again that the does was covered. "There's a motor stopping in front," she whispered.

Morton stepped across to the win-dow and, shielding himself behind the curtain, peered out.

the door was opened. The man who stood framed in the doorway was very tall, very emaciated, and, if one OMAHA LADS AT THE Y. M. C. A. SUMMER CAMP
