

REBUTTAL BEGINS IN ORPET CASE

State Calls Mrs. Margaret Youker to Contradict Testimony of Her Sister.

ORPET IS NOT RECALLED

Waukegan, Ill., July 7.—The defense, after introducing documentary evidence bearing on the Wisconsin statute governing the sale of poisons rested today in the case of Will H. Orpet, charged with the murder of Marion Lambert.

Attorney David R. Joslyn of the prosecution said that he wanted Orpet recalled for further cross-examination with regard to Celestia Youker, the young woman to whom he was reported engaged. Attorneys Willson and Potter of the defense objected. Judge Donnelly ruled that the defendant could not be recalled.

The first witness called by the state presented the unusual spectacle of a woman rebutting her sister's testimony. She was Mrs. Margaret Youker, a sister of Dorothy Mason, and married to a brother of Celestia Youker, the "other woman" in Orpet's life.

What Did Marion Say? Miss Mason called by the defense testified that she learned from her mother that Orpet was engaged to marry Celestia and that two or three days before Marion's death last February, as she and Marion were looking out of a window at school, she told her unsuspecting friend the news. According to Dorothy, Marion engaged with the comment, "Do you know what I think? Sometimes I think that life isn't worth living."

Both Miss Mason and Miss Lambert had noted at the time of the conversation an old woman lolling through the snow outside the window. On cross-examination at the time Attorney Joslyn had attempted to get Miss Mason to admit that she had not quoted Marion in full and that the later had added "for a decrepit old woman like that." Miss Mason denied that H. J. Carlin, an investigator for the defense, had advised her that the conclusion of the comment of Marion's remark was of no importance.

Part of Remark Omitted. Mrs. Youker testified that she was present at the interview between Mr. Carlin and Miss Mason and that the latter at that time gave the quotation in full, concluding with mention of the old woman.

"Mr. Carlin," went on the witness, "told her she could elaborate on the first part, but that she could treat the last part as unimportant."

On cross-examination the witness admitted that she acted with counsel for the state in an attempt to obtain damaging admissions from Orpet.

Holbrook Beats Cambridge. Holbrook, Neb., July 7.—(Special.)—In one of the fastest ball games of the season the Holbrook ball team defeated Cambridge here yesterday afternoon, 4 to 0. This makes six victories for Holbrook in the Furnas County League. Batteries: Holbrook, McDonald and Vanclave; Cambridge, Redwell and Kraniger.

The Secret of the Submarine

By E. Alexander Powell

SEVENTH INSTALLMENT

SYNOPSIS.
Lieutenant Jarvis Hope is detailed by the United States naval board to investigate and report his findings on the invention of Dr. Ralph Burke, which serves to bring the submarine to a state of perfection. The lieutenant arrives in Valdivia and is welcomed by the inventor and his daughter, Cleo. On the trial trip of the inventor's boat a Japanese seizer is surprised in the act of examining the mechanism of the ventilating device. Hope reports favorably on the new device, but there are others interested in it. An attempt to burglarize Dr. Burke's laboratory fails, but later Cleo finds him murdered in his bedroom. Cleo tells her father's library to get money; after she finds a note from which she learns that they contain the secret formula. With Hope she races to the auctioneer's store, only to find it in flames. Olga Ivanoff and Gerald Morton, two spies in search of the formula, attempt to capture Cleo when she calls at the house of Stephanski, the anarchist. Hope rushes to her aid; Morton shoots at him, but the bullet hits a bomb in the cellar, which explodes. Stephanski dies in the wreck of his house; the others escape. Hope and Cleo attend a ball at Mrs. Delmar's whose nephew has two of the missing books. Mahlin, a spy, attempts to steal the books, but is discovered by Hope; in the excitement that follows the books disappear. Mahlin escapes. Hope and Cleo boat for an island out in the bay. The conspirators follow in other boats. Mahlin and the Japanese turn on the island light. Morton's boat with the counterfeit strikes a stray mine in the bay.

neath the shack from the unsuspecting pair within it. So near were they, indeed, to Hope and Cleo that, as Mahlin whispered to Satsuma, "We can hear 'em change their minds." They heard Cleo's yawns as she awakened from her nap and said "Aren't those books dry enough so that we can look at them now, Jarvis?"

They could hear his footsteps crossing the floor above their heads and his answer, "They're pretty well dried now, Cleo," followed by the rustling of leaves.

A few minutes later came an ejaculation of impatience from Hope and the thud of a book tossed upon the floor. "There's nothing in that book—that's certain," he said, disgustedly, and, a little later, "Nor in this one."

Mahlin and Satsuma glanced at each other significantly. There was no need for them to trouble further about those two books.

"What shall we do now, Jarvis?" they heard Cleo ask.

"As soon as Hook and Morissey return with the gasoline we will start back," he answered. "But, instead of returning to San Francisco, what would you think of our making straight for Sandboro? It's the little coast town where Doctor Owen lives—the man, you know, to whom Fitzmaurice loaned the other book."

Mahlin did not wait to hear anything more. Beckoning to Satsuma to follow, he crawled silently away. When they were out of earshot of the shack he turned to his companion.

"You heard what they said, Satsuma? There's another of the books in Sandboro."

Satsuma nodded.

"If that pair were out of the way," Mahlin continued, "it would make things a lot easier for us."

Satsuma again nodded assentingly. "Listen, then," said Mahlin. "When I was under the house there an idea struck me. Do you remember the little toolhouse that we saw down by the landing place?"

"Yes," said Satsuma, who was a person of few words.

"Well, I took a look inside it, you remember. There was nothing much in it except tools—and a box of dynamite."

"Hah!" exclaimed the Japanese comprehendingly, "I understand. A very good idea."

"Suppose," said Mahlin, instinctively lowering his voice, "that we put a few sticks of dynamite underneath that old shack and light the fuse. Bang! They'd have to collect what was left of Master Naval Lieutenant Hope and the girl with a shovel!"

Darkness had fallen before the work of planting the dynamite was completed, for they had to work with the utmost caution in order not to attract the attention of Hope and Cleo, whom they could hear chatting gaily just above them.

"Listen, Jarvis!" Cleo whispered suddenly. "I heard a noise under the house!"

"Nonsense, dear," said Hope. "You're tired and nervous. It must have been the wind—or your imagination."

"It wasn't the wind and it wasn't my imagination. I know I heard something," insisted Cleo. "I'm going to see what it was," and she stepped to the door.

"Quick, Jarvis! Quick!" she called, her voice vibrant with fear. "Come here!" and at her summons he leaped toward her.

As he did so there came a roar which seemed to split the heavens, and the shack, wrenched from its frail supports as though by a giant's hand, trembled for a brief instant on the brink of the cliff and then toppled bodily into the sea.
