"I want you to marry me," said Morton, seating himself on the edge of the bed and attempting to draw her to him.

For an instant she gazed at him in mingled disbelief and anger, then sprang to her feet. The next instant he had taken her in his arms.

"And you're going to marry me, too, my beauty," he repeated, his breath hot upon her cheek, and he bent forward to kiss her, but, with a sudden movement she wrenched her-

On the way back to Ellenville, Mor on unfolded his scheme to Olga "It was that cabin on the ledge, he explained, "that gave me the idea It's as remote and inaccessible as an island in the Arctic. Suppose we left island in the Arctic. Suppose we left the girl there for a week or two. I fancy she would then he willing enough to tell us anything she knows, eh? How does my plan strike you?"
"As far as it goes," said Olga, "it is admirable. You seem, however, to have overlooked one rather important detail. You tell me that this cabin is practically inaccessible. How do you propose, then, to get the girl to it?"
"By aeroplane," Morton exclaimed

"By aeroplane," Morton exclaimed triumphantly. On an afternoon early in the fol-lowing week Cleo, as had become her custom, was strolling along a quiet lane in the outskirts of Santa Eula-lia. Today she was alone, however, for Hope had been called to Los Anreles on business, and Hook, seated on a cracker barrel, was entertaining the habitues of the general store with the habitues of the general store with sea yarns. So completely absorbed in her thoughts was Cleo that she paid no attention to the large closed car, with drawn curtains, which rolled silently up behind her. Just as it came opposite her the door swung open, a man leaped out, a blanket was thrown over her head, muffling her screams, and she was dragged into the car, the whole performance being enacted in far less time than it takes to tell it. She struggled desperately to free herself from the enveloping folds, but unseen hands pinned her against the cushions while someone held a sponge, saturated with something that smelled sweet and sickly, over her nose and mouth. A few inhalations and her struggles ceased.

over her nose and mouth. A few inhalations and her struggles ceased.

When Cleo recovered consciousness she found herself in a small and unkept room. Its walls, which were of unplaned boards, were covered with pictures cut from the illustrated papers; its furniture consisted of a small iron stove, much the worse for rust, an oilcloth-covered table, a chair and the foul-smelling bunk on which she an oilcloth-covered table, a chair and her a man was sitting. She must have made some sound, for the man turned. It was Gerald Morton!

"So you're awake at last, my dear,"
he said, coming toward her. "How are you feeling?"

At sight of Morton she attempted

At sight of Morton she attempted to rise, but a wave of giddiness swept over her and she sank back upon the bunk. "I feel ill," she moaned. "My head feels as though it were going to burst

"Nothing has happened—yet," said Morton coolly.

"You're in a cabin in the mountains, my dear, and quite a lonely place it is, too."

"But how did I get here?" she asked, striving desperately to keep her composure.

"I brought you here," was the answer. "I wanted a quiet little talk with you where we would not be disturbed, and this seemed just the place." place."
"What-what do you want of me?"

the maids of honor are to ride wild horses Thursday afternoon in the grand parade that is to open the wild west show and competitive events at the Douglas county fair grounds.

The entire board of governors, or such of them as are not away on vacations at this moment, will also ride in this opening parade around the race track when the bugle sounds, the pistols crack and the rawhides begin to pop.

A big parade is to be given down town this afternoon at 4:30 through the principal business streets, when the cowboys, Indians, cowgirls, Mexicans and all attaches will be seen on the streets in one wild cavalcade.

Arrangements have been made to park automobiles free of charge on the grounds during the show, four afternoons and evenings, beginning Thursday.

bent forward to kiss her, but, with a sudden movement she wrenched herself free.

"Marry you?" she cried contempts ously. "Marry you, you cur, you cad? I wouldn't marry you if you cad? I wouldn't marry you if you were the last man on earth!" and, as he again attempted to kiss her, she slapped him in the face.

"You little devil!" he snarled, livid with anger, "you'll kiss me now, and before I'm through with you you'll be glad to marry me," and he made as though to seize her, but, eluding his grasp, she reached the door, opened it and fled with Morton at her heels. A hundred yards she ran blindly; then stopped abruptly, trembling with terror and excitement, for at her very feet a chasm yawned. But as her pursuer approached she turned defantly.

"If you attempt to touch me, Mr. Morton," she said steadily, "I shall jump. I would rather be dead than have you lay a hand on me."

"Come, come, my dear," he said stoothingly, as though he were talking to a frightened of. I'm not going to hurt you," and he cautiously advanced toward her a step or two.

"One step nearer," warned Cleo, in a strange, strained voice, "and I shall jump." And he knew that she would make good the threat.

"You need a chance to cool down at and think things over," he said, "I suppose my proposal was a little sudden. So I'll just leave you here for a feet.
