Billie Burke Scores By Natural Playing

Some great dramatic critic has said that "The perfection of art is natural-ness." He wasn't speaking of Billie Burke in particular when he penned that sentence, but certainly there is no star on the speaking stage or the screen today who is more perfectly natural in every move than Titian-haired Billie, the star of "Gloria's Romance.

In chapter twelve of the great George Kleine motion picture novel she has to run the full gamut of emotions, and it is certainly in the little things she does that her perfect naturalness becomes most apparent. For instance, take the card playing scene with which the chapter opens. Notice how, after laying a card on the table, she quickly picks it up again—claiming her woman's prerogative of being allowed to change her mind—and then note how, reconsidering and knitting her brows, she finally plays that same card again!

card again!

What woman in the audience won't recognize that as a thing she herself has done scores of times, and what man won't remember how his wife, sister or sweetheart did the same thing only last night or the evening before? It is the natural touch which Billie gives to her playing—the touch that makes her acting absolutely unique and superior to anything that the screen has shown heretofore.

Nance O'Neil and Theda Bara at the Farnam Today

Nance O'Neil, supported by Theda Bara and William E. Shay will be presented at the Farnam in "Kreutzer Sonata." the drama of the clash of the "Old order changing, giving place to the new." Throughout its shifting scenes, from the soberly sad plains of Russia, to the thrifty atmosphere of Connecticut and the rush and toil of New York city, the tragedy of a noble woman's soul betrayed and relentlessly crushed, form the dominant motif of this play of splendid force and sweeping power. Says Fearless Pearl White

Pearl White, Pathe's "fearless, peerless girl." can swim-like a fish—and does, very frequently, these summer days. She's also considerable of a business woman, although, like most business people, she guesses wrong ever so often. She made a wrong guess recently in the stock market, and several weeks' salary went poof and several weeks salary went poor in consequence.

A day or two after her brokers had told her the sad news she guided her nifty roadster over the Long Island roads to Long Beach. She was bound for a bath house when a friend stopped her.

"Hello, Pearl," she said, "whither bound?"

bound?"
"For the briny," answered Miss

White.

"What!" exclaimed the other, "you'd swim now, with all these sharks in the occan?"

"Sharks?" said Miss Whise with contempt. "Why, sister, after the sharks I've met up with down in Wall street I'm about as much afraid of any sharks I'm likely to encounter in the ocean as I'd be of a minnow!"

And a few moments later her little red bathing cap was seen bobbing about far outside the line of breakers. White
