No Guess Work by Uncle Sam in Measuring the Depth of Rain

A skeptic came into the United States weather bureau and spoke to Colonel Welsh, saying: "It's guess work telling how much rainfall there is when it's only about one-hundredth of an inch, isn't it?"

Colonel Welsh fixed the doubting Thomas with a baffle look. Then he led him up the narrow staircase to the roof of the federal building

On each end of a little "see-saw" about six inches long is a tiny "bucket" about half as big as a spool of thread.

The mechanism is delicately adjusted and when the "up" bucket has one-one-hundredth of an inch of rain in it, it goes down and at the same time tips the water out.

As it goes down it works an electric contact that records .01 of an inch of rain. When the opposite bucket gets its .01 of an inch, it goes down—and so on.

This is the best device for measuring rain except in freezing weather, said Colonel Welsh.

The colonel led the ex-skeptic down the narrow staircase from the roof of the federal building to the weather bureau, he said with dignity as he bowed his visitor out.

In Dangerous Condition From the Loss of Blood

Jack Shepler, a roofer in flat 10, at 1325 Chicago street, is in St. Joseph's hospital in a dangerous condition from loss of blood and shock as the result of a fight with a negro, Wallace Kay.

Shepler said that Kay and a white man came to his room shortly before noon and wanted to enter, but he drove them out.

The two men got away, but Kay was arrested by Detectives Dolan and Lahy and charged with intent to kill.
