its stead a modern building.

This lot is the property of Mrs. Lilliam Maul, who made a ninety-nine-year lease on the ground to Jesse E. Rogers in 1912, and the lease carries with it an option to purchase which will be exercised by the purchasers. This lease was later assigned by Rogers to George & Co., who are now selling it to Traver Bros. The consideration is kept secret, but it is known that it is very much in excess of the lease valuation.

The leader of the band ripped out a torrent of oaths. "Jose," he called to one of the men, a half-breed of peculiarly evil appearance, "you and Manuel go ahead with the prisoners. If they try to escape or make trouble, shoot 'em. The rest of us will hold back the punchers until you've got a good start."

good start."

In obedience to his orders, Olga and Morton, with their two guards, pushed on up the hill, while the bandits took shelter behind rocks and trees to check the advance of the men of the Bar-E. Just as the prisoners and their words. Bar-E. Just as the prisoners and their guards reached the overhapging crags which marked the entrance to the pass a sputter of rifle fire suddenly broke out below them. The cowboys and the bandits were in action. Morton instinctively checked his horse to listen, but jhe outlaw named Jose tapped his rifle with so significant a gesture that the Easterner moved forward without a word of protest.

Leaving the pass, their trail now led across the roughest country that Morton had ever seen. Jose turned his horse from the trail and, pushing his way through a screen of underbrush, entered a narrow cleft in what appeared from a little disunderbrush, entered a narrow cleft in what appeared, from a little distance, to be a solid wall of rock, to emerge, a moment later, in a veritable secret valley. From the top of one of the cliffs a mountain stream tumbled in a series of cascades and waterfalls to the valley floor, across which it wound and twisted to disappear subterraneously upon the other side. Beside the stream some tents were pitched and beyond them was an open fireplace over which tents were pitched and beyond them was an open fireplace over which a man was cooking. Instead of dismounting at their tents, their guards conducted Olga and Morton straight across the little valley toward the cliff on the opposite side. As they approached, Morton noticed, cut in the face of the cliff, a square aperture which resembled the entrance to a small tunnel or to the gallery of a mine. He guessed, and rightly, that it was the entrance to one of those natural caverns with which the Sierras abound and which the bandit leader had utilized as a habitation. Jose exchanged a few words in Span-ish with a fellow bandit, evidently a sentry, who was lounging at the

"I trust that you will honor my modest quarters by using them as your own," said the bandit. "I regret that I have no maid to assist you, but this has been, heretofore, a bachelor establishment. I and my men are, however, at your disposal; you have only to command us. After you have refreshed yourself I trust that you will give me your company at lunch." "Now, Carrillo," said, Morton bluntly, when they had finished their meal, which was served in the open. "how much is it going to cost me to get my freedom?"

"The discussion of these sordid details is most distasteful to me, Mr. Morton," said the outlaw deprecatingly, "but, if you insist, why—shall we say $10,000?"

"Nonsense," replied Morton, "I haven't that much in cash."
"But you can get it, Mr. Morton—you can get it," said Carrillo, "or your friends can get it for you."

"Suppose I refuse to submit to your extortion?"

"Then," said the bandit, and Morton shrank from the cruelty which suddenly leaped into his eyes, "I should be regretfully compelled to deprive you of your ears."

"You—you would cut off my ears?" screamed Morton, his face blanching.

"Only with the greatest regret, I assure you," said the outlaw suavely.
"I think I can raise the money," said the latter hoarsely, his face the color of ashes. "I will give you an order on my bankers in San Francisco."

order on my bankers in San Francisco."

"I shall be delighted to take your cheque, Mr. Morton," responded Carrillo, courteously, "and I trust that you will remain here as my guest until it is cashed."

"And what is to be the amount of my ransom?" asked Olga.

"That, my dear lady," replied Carrillo, "is a question that I have not yet decided. Perhaps," he added meaningly, 'you will continue to honor me with your presence. It is a simple life that I lead here in the mountains, but it has its compensations. Will you consider it?"

"I will think it over," said Olga, faintly, for she knew, from the look in Carrillo's eyea, that he had not the slightest intention of releasing her. "And now, with your permission, I will get some rest, I am tired."
