

TELLS OF SEA HORSE

Weird Combination of Horse's Head and the Body of a Caterpillar.

IS NOT GOOD FOR FOOD

Washington, Aug. 19.—The interesting little fish known as the sea horse, or hippocampus, which has attracted much attention on account of its curious form and no less peculiar habits from time immemorial, is discussed by Dr. Charles K. Eastman of the American Museum of Natural History, in one of the Smithsonian annual reports just issued.

Occurring plentifully in the Mediterranean, the typical species was well known to the ancients, and owing to the wide distribution of the remaining thirty odd species comprising the genus, sea horses have now become familiar objects in most large aquariums of the world. They appear to be a weird combination of a horse's head and a body of tail of a caterpillar. It has been said that if a coiled worm were attached to the base of a chess knight the sea horse would be well imitated.

Generally at Rest. The most frequent position assumed is a state of rest, with the tail wound around the stem of a plant or other substance, and the body carried nearly or quite erect. The body is rigidly held in the apparent rigidity of its armor, almost every other attitude consistent with such a form can be assumed. The body can be thrown outward or downward at various angles, the tail being wound around a plant in a double coil. Once in a while one eye may roll toward the observer, while the other may be passive or look backward or even in the opposite direction. The little fish can move its eyes independently of each other, and in a completely different way. A peculiar effect is produced by the manner in which these fishes peer at some objects, reminding one of a very near-sighted person.

Releasing itself from its support it can progress slowly, still in a vertical position, its tail curved inward, reminding one of a screw propeller, and with its pectoral fins vibrating in harmony.

Increased as it is in an almost inflexible coat of mail, progression cannot be effected by lateral flexion of the body as in ordinary fishes, and with the flexion in a vertical direction, is limited.

Has Gas Bladder. With such limited powers of progression a nice adjustment of organs is necessary. One method is said to use an air bladder, comparatively large and always distended by a quantity of gas so exactly in harmony with the specific gravity of the body that this entire body is a hydrostatic apparatus of extreme sensitivity. A proof of this is that if a single bubble of gas no larger than the head of a very small pin be extracted, the fish immediately loses its equilibrium and sinks to the bottom, on which it must crawl until the wound has been cicatrized and a new supply of gas secreted by the internal membrane of the bladder. It is well known that the eggs of hippocampus are taken care of by the male in an abdominal sac or pouch.

Not Good for Food. One sixteenth century writer states that: Its size does not exceed a finger's length; it has a tough and rugose skin, and neither man nor fish of other kind esteem it as food. In color it is sometimes dark; in other cases white. It bears a small fin, a little elevated along the back, and another small one on the neck, where it joins the head. The mouth is small and tubiform. Dead or dried specimens have the tail coiled inward, like that of a chameleon; it is furnished with small, blunt prickles, and is of quadrangular section. The spinous projections arise from transverse folds which cross the tail.

Certain authors profess that the ashes of hippocampus, when commingled with liquid pitch, sallow or oil or sweet mazarum, cure baldness and pain in the sides. An application of oil of roses into which the live animal has been dipped and killed is an efficacious remedy for chills and fever.

Medicinal Properties. Dr. Eastman mentions alleged medicinal properties of hippocampus, gravely set forth by Matthioli, Beloni, Rondelet, Gesner and others. Aristotle does not mention the hippocampus, and no word was used by the poets of classical antiquity as the name of a sea monster, half horse and half fish, on which sea divinities rode. It is probably in this character that conventionalized representations of the creature appear in Etruscan and other ancient works of art.

A curious confusion of this odd fish with some other species occurred years ago, when its identity was mixed with the remora, or sucking fish, also known as "ship-stayer," which clove to ships and held them steadfast in the sea, as though the ships were aground, although the wind and waves strove to wreck them. Another story connected the hippocampus with the eel-like "reversus," said to have a cap attached to its head with which it captured other fish and tortoise, and was therefore used by the natives, reported by Columbus, for catching other fish. It was also once called "sea dragon," or "zy-death," and again, from the Latin, "equus maris," "horse of the sea," on account of the fact that these creatures were all supposed to die in the air or at least suffer when out of water.

Iowa Woman Seeks High Place in Woman's Relief Corps Roster

Iowa Falls, Ia., Aug. 19.—The mid-west will seek the election of Mrs. Estrella E. Plopper of this city as national treasurer of the Woman's Relief Corps at the coming national convention in Kansas City. For thirty years Mrs. Plopper has been active in the corps work in this state and has filled the offices of department president and department treasurer with credit to herself and to the department. In making the election of Mrs. Plopper the Women's Relief Corps in Iowa know that she is amply qualified in every way to fill the position and that the mid-west is entitled to the office, as it will bring the base of supplies nearer the geographical center of the departments and equalize the burden of freight rates. Mrs. Plopper was a candidate for this position at the national convention in Washington, D. C., but withdrew, leaving no opposition for the present treasurer, who has filled the position for terms. Mrs. Plopper is a business woman of many years' experience and her qualifications coupled with her long service in the department corps make her an ideal candidate for the position which the Department of Iowa will seek to fill at the coming convention.

"Clown Hall" to Be Erected Here is One of 24 Ringling Canvas Palaces

A wonderful house is soon to be erected here. It will be built of canvas and the roof will be held skyward by big red and blue poles as large as trees in the woods. At the very top of one of these poles will be a flag bearing the words, "Clown Hall." It is the traveling home of the Ringling Brothers' army of jesters.

Besides that which is made of canvas, there is still another "Clown Hall." This second home is located at the circus winter quarters in Baraboo, Wis. Here it is that the funny chaps gather after the big show has completed its tour, to plan their grotesque costumes, rehearse a world of comic antics, rig up big wooden cannons, arships and whatnot, and to think out new frolics and jokes of every kind. Could the thousands upon thousands of children who laugh with these Merry Andrews from April until November but creep up to the windows of the snow-covered "Hall" in Baraboo on a December day and peek inside, they would surely think that they had discovered old Santa's workshop. For they would see big and little men busily engaged making all sorts of gaily painted carts and wagons, queer looking guns that shoot nothing more dangerous than water, and no end of laughable masks and faces. And nearby, in big buildings frescoed with pictures, but kept very warm within, they would catch glimpses of spotted ponies and Shetlands, blinking monkey keys, knowing dogs, shaggy bears and even baby elephants going round and round in big, broad rings or mounted on stages all very attentive to their score of trainers and making ready for the long journey which always begins in the springtime. This tour has now begun and clowns and animals and all the rest of the wonders of Spangland will be here when the first circus comes to Omaha at Twenty-first and Paul streets, on Monday, August 28.

Organized Waiters Refuse to Serve Lunch for Hughes

San Francisco, Aug. 19.—Union waiters refused today to serve a luncheon given to Charles E. Hughes, republican presidential candidate, at the San Francisco Commercial club because the club exhibits in its windows an open shop card as part of a fight being made here by the Chamber of Commerce upon the closed shop. For the Hughes luncheon a request was sent by the club management to the waiters' union asking for sixty-five waiters after the union officials had protested to Francis V. Keessing, chairman of the republican state central committee, against slipping the candidate in an open shop club.

The Waiters' association backed up the action of the local waiters and pickets were sent to the Commercial club entrance to warn union waiters away. Culinary workers struck several weeks ago for shorter hours and the Restaurant Men's association immediately declared an open shop regime.

One of the large downtown open shop cafes locked its doors over the lunch hour and sent its entire crew to the relief of the Hughes luncheon.

Nick Carter's Dad Can Now Stroll Up Broadway
