PERCY HAUGHTON CHANGES HIS MIND

Year in Base Ball Convinces Percy that Pablic is Composed of Desirables.

WILL NUMBER HIS PLAYERS WILL REVIEW THE PARADE

New York, Sept. 23,-There is ome possibility now that the players review the historical parade in in the intercollegiate foot ball games Omaha October 5. will be numbered this year. Percy Yestedday he accepted Omaha's inviflaughton of Harvard has at last tation to deliver an address in this one to the conclusion that it might city on that date. The invitation was come to the conclusion that it might not be such a bad idea after all. This hange of heart has come to Haughton after a year's experience as professional base ball manager. Experience with the major American mastime seems to have been in the mastime seems to have been in the cature of a liberal education. Before the accepted the presidency of the Boston National League Base Bat club Haughton was of the opinion that it was not necessary to number toot ball players for the convenience of the public. As far as foot lail was concerned the public was composed of a lot of stepchildren with muckeristic tendencies.

But in the brief space of one base muckeristic tendencies.

But in the brief space of one base ball season Haughton has developed a toleration for the public which is ast ripening into a genuine affection. Haughton discovered that the public is a body composed of highly desirable persons, each with a six-bit piece ready for the nearest box office. Persons who smilingly part with numbers of six-bit pieces cannot be wholly bad. Haughton has concluded. In fact, he is willing to admit that they may possess certain homely virtues.

The main objection to the numbering of players was that it might make

The main objection to the numbering of players was that it might make easy the work of scouts sent by opposing teams to watch the preliminary games. With the players numbered it was easier for the scouts to follow certain plays which were intended to be made hard to understand.

Subsea Warfare Is Portrayed on King's Highway

Timely topics are good subjects for astute showmen to study. Probably that is why "Over and Under Sea," a very timely topic, will be presented, in wonderful working order, during the engagement of the C. A. Worthham shows, which is to provide amusement attractions for the Ak-Sar-Ben festival, starting Tuesday. "Over and Under the Sea" is a vivid portrayal of the dangers of the deep sea during the present European struggle. In a large tank of water there is a replica of a large merchantman ship, intent on its easy across the ocean. Suddenly, through the placid little sea there appears the periscope of a subsea monster. Instantly there is a flash, as a shot cuts across the course of the big very timely topic, will be presented, in shot cuts across the course of the big ship. Other shots follow and soon the magnificient ship lurches, and gradually, as water rushes through the holes made by the destroyer, sinks, while invisable fingers flash to the world "S. O. S."

Without warning, from the distance, comes a terrific boom and swish. The comes a territic boom and swish. The call has been answered. The shot hits the periscope of the destroyer. Other shots follow in quick succession as a replica of the United States battleship Texas, looms into sight It is another modern achievement of modern times, by modern men exercising modern brains.

bered it was easier for the scouts to follow certain plays which were intended to be made hard to understand.

Of course, there is no law against the practice of scouting for foot ball teams, but to the outsider, who is given to understand that some mighty high ideals of sportsmanship rule in college foot ball games, the practice seems a bit unethical. To use the mildest term, it seems to savor of "snooping." Of course, professional base ball teams employ scouts, and nee in a while they grab the other tellows' signals. But the main idea in professional base ball is to win and to keep the box office force busy.

This objection to numbering the players for the convenience of the public is the least reasonable. If scouting is strictly ethical and necessary, there can be no reason for attempting to make the work of the foot ball scouts more difficult. If the practice is not ethical or desirable, it ought to be abolished and those who employ it should be put in the mucker class.

Subsect West West Mary Stevens, alias Mary Davis, 2014 South Third street, persuaded C. B. Harris to give her $540 for safe keeping. Mary was keeping it safe by proceeding to ramble over the western horizon, when she was overtaken by the fleet-footed law and to be worked the combination and delivered Harris his cash. He didn't have the heart to prosecute, so she was allowed to depart uncensured.

Bellevue Teacher Used to Play Where Historic Battle Rages

The battlefield of the Marne and the yard of the cathedral at Rheims, which has been so materially injured by German shell fire, was the girlod playground of Miss Viviane B. Miller, new instructor in French and swimming for women at Bellevue college. Miss Miller spent several years swimming for women at Bellevue college. Miss Miller spent several years of childhood as a student in the government high school at Rheims, known as the Lycee de Rheims pour les Jeune Filles, the Rheims high school for young girls.

With her sister, Miss Bernice Miller, instructor in French and swimming last year at Bellevue, and her brother Melville, now a senior at the University of lowa, Miss Miller attended school in Germany for a year and then, as a girl of 13, went to high school in Rheims. The school building was only two blocks from the great cathedral and the home of the Millers was three blocks distant. "Yes, we used to play in the cathedral yard," said Miss Miller, and often the three of us have romped beneath the Arc de Triomphe, erected by Augustus Caesar. We have gone for walks down the street named after Juan of Arc, the Rue de Jeanne d'Arc, where the French heroine's name is on the lips of every child. North of Rheims my father often brought us children to watch French infantry deilling, and we made numerous expeditions along the Marne, south of Rheims, never dreaming that the meadows where we gathered flowers would some day be the scene of the battle that saved France. Many of the villages where we have stopped for a noonday lunch were retaken would some day be the scene of the battle that saved France. Many of the villages where we have stopped for a noonday lunch were retaken again and again on that September day two years ago.

"When I read a week ago of the celebration in France of the anniversary of the great battle, there was nothing I wanted so much as to be back on the banks of the Marne once more gathering wild flowers.

Miss Miller's first experience in swimming was gathered in Rheims.

"Accompanied by an old neighbor, my sister and I used to go down to the municipal beach on the Velse river, which flows through Rheims. I do not remember ever having learned to swim. It seem, as if we always knew how."

Miss Miller gives the young women daily lessons in swimming, and
