

Coronado's Hysterical Bull

ance. Captain H. C. Martens' team of Modern Woodmen, the national prize team, which has plucked every nation-wide competitive prize in the Modern Woodmen for fourteen years, gave the drill on the stage. They discarded their axes, and in order to make the drill more military, used modern army rifles. This was always a splendid part of the evening's program, and never failed to elicit great applause. The personnel of this noted team was:

H. C. Martens, Captain
S. V. Barker
C. D. Sparks
C. H. Kreile
L. Lavi
C. A. Hase
A. Waage
J. M. Lockert
P. C. Rasmussen
A. D. Curtiss

Still he tolerates him, while Coronado sings a number of songs. So the halls rang with the chorus of Coronado's song:
"Oh, there's nothing too good for Coronado, there's nothing too good for me."
Oh, I used to throw the bull,
Back to Spain when I was full,
And there's nothing too good for me."
Frank Latenser, as Delmonico, the royal chef, broke, unannounced upon the scene and complained bitterly of the squaws who hang around the kitchen, the manner in which they devour everything he has and the peculiar tastes they express, which demand gold fish done in the most ridiculous style.

Delmonico also has some other grievances. He, too, is sick and tired of gold fish, so sings his cravings, as he says, "How my insides is hankering for something greasy."
Away he goes into the rollick chorus of:
"I want my ham hocks,
My greasy pork chops, etc. etc.
Oh, you chicken, will I never see thee more."
As no history of Nebraska would be complete without Logan Fontenelle, this same Logan appears on the scene now, slowly walking toward the stage. Rex Mourhouse took the part, and when properly attired in leather scout suit, and equipped with a long muzzled rifle or musket, he made a very credible Fontenelle. Again the historical genius rushed out to meet him, cocked his glasses to the proper angle, pulled down his vest and inquired the name of the intruder. Finding it is too early in history for Fontenelle to appear, he sent him away and refused to let him stay on the scene. Several times Fontenelle seeks to butt into the performance, but each time is sent away until at last he comes and is welcomed, the historian having consulted his book and found that the time is ripe for his coming. On one occasion he came bearing a diminutive Fontenelle hotel on his back. Thus Fontenelle is admitted to the heterogeneous group of merry-makers.

The tableau followed immediately, with the great seal of Nebraska and a group made up of a soldier, a sailor, a farmer, an Indian and a blacksmith, all in uniform or in the garb of their profession or vocation, and all thrown under the most beautiful light effects. L. Pettengill jr. was the sailor, Russell Tetard, the soldier; T. B. Dysart, the Indian; Herbert Wing, the farmer, and C. A. Health the blacksmith, and all maintained their positions with such perfect immobility that many went all through the season's shows believing the whole tableau was but a huge frame painting, with the advantages of clever light effects.

In all this elaborate production, a large working crew is required. Some one had to start the "Zeppelin" on its way. Some one had to keep up the motion of the huge churn that churned all visitors together and moulded them into loyal knights. Someone had to draw the curtains back to let the ox team through. Someone had to yoke and unyoke the oxen, and a big force of husky and willing workers was required. And here is the list of those workers, (Continued on Page Seven, Column Five.)

WILLIAM J. CONNELL

W. J. CONNELL

WILLIAM J. CONNELL was born in Canada, near boundary line of Vermont. Not as old as John C. Cowin, nor as young as John Lee Webster (?), but can run faster, jump higher and hit harder than either or both of them!

He came to Omaha from Vermont with the birth of Nebraska, early in 1867. Was elected district attorney to succeed Cowin. Went to congress in 1889. Was city attorney of Omaha by appointment for several terms. Was attorney for the Street Railway company for over twenty years. Resigned January, 1916. Is now a "free lance!"

He has owned more real estate and paid more taxes than any man in Omaha. Paid over $60,000 to the county treasurer in last two years. Intends to devote the last decade of his legal career to serving the public and protecting the rights and interests of the people.

A. D. COMPTON

Candidate for County Commissioner on the Democratic Ticket Against "Gus Harte," Douglas County.

Has been a resident of Douglas county for 35 years. Has been a heavy taxpayer for over 20 years. Is a successful farmer and stock raiser. Starting with nothing but his two hands and a determination to succeed, he has, by hard work and close attention to business, acquired heavy holdings of western Douglas county real estate. A visit out through the country districts of the county will readily convince anyone of the esteem in which "Data" Compton is held by the people of his district. You will find them almost to a man boasting for him for commissioner. They know that he is capable, square and honest to the last degree and will be on the job every minute when it comes to looking after the interests of the taxpayers of the county. No man in the county is better acquainted with the needs of the roads of Douglas county than he is. He is a thorough road man, having made a careful study of this phase of work for years. He feels that the roads of the county have not been receiving the attention that they should. The people out through the county feel that they have not been getting value received for the money that has been spent on the county roads. This is the reason they are behind "Data" Compton, regardless of party. If elected Commissioner it will be the height of my ambition to keep the county roads in perfect condition.
