Long chains of various sorts are in fashion this autumn. The woman who seeks individuality nowadays outnumbers the woman who merely follow the fashion—which means that most women try to find something just a little different in the detail of their dress than that of their friend and neighbor. So it is that there are a dozen and one different sorts of long chains to be found, each as interesting as the one before it.

There are so many charming muffs made of various materials other than fur, and often combined with fur, that it is difficult to pick out any for special notice. One that is unusually attractive, however, is made of tulle, velvet and fur. The foundation of the muff is tulle, and there are wide trimming bands or velvet, with a little fur along the edge of the frill at the hands. There is a collar to match, wide and fluffy, and there is a most interesting little hat of the three most interesting little hat of the three fabrics combined.

Fox fur continues to be very popular. It is usually shown in the conventional set consisting of muff and scarf. The melon and pillow muff appear to be the popular shapes in muffs. Possibly the only remarkable note about most of these fox sets is the man-ner in which they are worn. The clever woman will adapt some individual knack in fastening it, thereby introducting a new note.

Measuring the Brain

The brain is our instrument of knowledge, but it tells us nothing about itself. There is no branch of human physiology so little developed as that which pertains to the brain.

Jabots are back in favor. But they are never the skimpy jabots of yesterday. They are of cascade variety, designed especially to be worn with a suit of the Incroyable order.

Red velvet is smartly used for a cap of the jockey-cap style. This shape withstands much windy weather and is very becoming, and the color is admirable for cold and dull automa and winter days.

Is there any other indication, then, by which the size of a man's brain can be judged during his life?

Recently it has been suggested that the eye offers such a test. Large eyes, it is said, usually indicate large brains behind them. The experiments brains beauth them. Advice to the Lovelorn By Beatrice Fairfax. Be More Explicit.

Be More Explicit.

Dear Miss Fairfax: I am 18 and have been going on with a man of 23 for quite a while, just with the intention of being a good friend. Although I did not, in any way, encourage his attentions, they seem to be serious, and I am at a lose as to what course to take.

If I should tell him that J cannot marry him, I will lose a very good friend. If I do not, he will seen expect ine to become engaged to him. That I cannot do, for the reason that if I marry him I will spoil his reason that if I marry him I will spoil his reason that if I marry him I will spoil his reason that if I marry him I will spoil his reason that if I marry him I will spoil his reason that if I more him, I have a bad character. It is not that at all.

I hope you will not think ms foolish or silly, but I do hope that you will take this into a little consideration, and help me like you have done to many other people, who are now happy, owing only to your very good and sound advice.
