Cociety Notes December 26, 1916. by Mellifician

The morning after the day before finds the younger set at its morning map, the more responsive older folk writing their thank-you notes and toilers back at their toil. The parties which have been given so far have been most enjoyable. The Junior club dance with its cotillion was the grantest good time that the younger Country club set has enjoyed for a long time. It was such a variety to have the colitilion that everyone entered into the spirit of the thing and added his personal pleasure to that of everyone else.

the coltillion that everyone entered into the spirit of the thing and added his personal pleasure to that of everyone else.

The dancers of the same set particularly liked the music at the subscription dance at the Fontenelle last evening, when the colored saxophone orchestra played. Plenty of handsome new gowns are appearing at these affairs, but the school folks are eclipsing all the others in that respect. As one popular young woman said, "They are just pushing us out of the picture."

The younger set has had the most delightful time at the dancing parties given by Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Barker Saturday evening and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Crittenden Smith last evening. About 130 of the young people attended last evening and enjoyed the simple, pretty party immensely.

This, however, is only the beginning of the week, we must remember. Because the snow has left us and the ice is fast going, the little in-between frolies which the young ones enjoy will be confined to the theater and the house this week. Skating on the Rooded tennis courts and the lakes will have to wait for the freeze which is sure to follow the thaw, but sking, skating and such pleasures have been effectually stopped for the first part of the holidays. In the meantime the usual calendar of teas, dinner and dancing parties goes merrily on.

Macaroni.

"The morning after the night before!" After a day of feasting upon oysters and poultry and stuffing and pies and puddings and cakes and candies and all the rest of the good things which you and I enjoyed, per-haps just by the law of reactions we shall be interested in a plain, mass just by the law of reactions we shall be interested in a plain, wholesome, nutritious, cheap food-macaroni. I give it all these complipentary adjectives, because it is easily cooked, may be varied in a multitude of ways, and a 10-cent package furnishes about 1,200 heat units to the body, including about 180-heat units from body-building material. The food is made of a flour paste forced through tubes and dried. A specially hard wheat, called durum wheat, is used. The ordinary sized tubes form the macaroni, the smaller tubes and the thin strings the vermicelli and spaghetti. The paste is also made into tiny letters and numbers which are used in soups. Macaroni mow comes as "cut" or "elbow" macaroni. This form is more convenient to use and is touched less by human hands in the process of making, but does not seem to be quite so tender. rather flavorless food in itself, the methods of using it always include the addition of more highly flavored ingredients, or of seasoning.

General Directions—The main foodstuff present in macaroni is starch, therefore the principle of cooking the food is dependent upon the starch. Throw the broken sticks into rapidly boiling, salted water. Cook about fifteen minutes, or the time given on the package, which is usually accurate. Drain and pour dold water over immediately to keep the tubes from sticking to each other. Macaroni swells to about development of the packet of the thick cream sauce.
