G. W. Wattles Coyly Comes Forth as a Poet

Introducing Mr. Gurdon W. Wattles, street car magnate, banker, club man, exposition manager, philanthropist, and poet.

Meet Mr. Wattles, ladies and gentlemen.

Some of his intimate friends have known that Mr. Wattles writes verse for his own satisfaction, but prior to this time he has not come before the world as a poet. Down at Limcoln ast night, however, he uncovered a new phase of his many-sided activities, and instead of telling stories to fill out his after-dinner talk to the state's historians, he recited some of state's historians, he recited some of his own poems.

One of these is a tribute to work, inspired. Mr. Wattles said, by the pleasure he felt on returning from a long trip and looking forward to again taking up his duties in his office. Its thought has been presented the many times but not in the form he.

With the masker came, when the answer came, with the mask of the sky was affame. The sky was affaired.

With rass of the setting sun.

The negligent mate
With fged his faber had wen. many times, but not in the form he has given it. This poem is: has given it. I his poem is:
The isy of work comes back to me;
The end of rest will welcome be.
Like battle horse at clash of arms.
That champe his bit at war's slaring
I long for work that must be done,
For contests to be fought and won. Then I thought of mothers.
Whe wait for others
To bring success and renown.
For mothers must take
What the fathers make in the social scale, up or down

I pity men who do not know.
That they must harvest what they we had the see that every task that is well done tilves strength for others yet to com The blacksmith's arm grows big and strot His heart is filled with love and song. The idler gets no strength from strife. For him there is no toy in life. To feel the pride of victories won The work at hand must be well done

Often a Staff Correspondent.)

Lincoln, Jan. 11—(Special.)—Some of the members of the lower house cannot see anything for Nebraska in accepting the good roads appropriation offered by the federal government, and a resolution signed by Dafoc, Dau and Radke calling upon representatives in congress to vote for a repeal of the law was read and laid over for one day.

On motion of Bulla, the house will adjourn one day duering the sessions of organized agriculture next week.

There's no other corn-remover in the world that acts like "Gets-IL" No new discavery has been made in carn-removers since "Gets-IL" was born. Don't lorget that fact. "Gets-II" does away forever with the use of salves that irritate, bandages that make a bundle of your toe, plasters that half do the work, knives and sessions that day blood. Use "Gets-IL"—no more diguing or cutting.
