Second Run of the Picture Required to Handle the Overflow Crowd at the Theater.

GUESTS OF THE OMAHA BEE

Fully 2,000 thousand happy, joyous, and gleeful youngsters crowded into the Strand theater yesterday to follow the amusing antics of Douglas

No sooner were the doors opened at 9 o'clock than a 1,000 lads and lassies ranging in age fron 4 to 15 years, tightly clutching the precious coupons they had clipped from The Bee, made a rush for the entrance and coupous they had clipped from The Bee, made a rush for the entrance and a mad attack of the choice seats on the main floor. By 9.30, when the first reel of the picture was flashed on the screen, every seat in the entire theater, from the very front row downstairs to the very last row upstairs, was occupied by a pleasure-bent juvenile, laughing and applauding to his heart's content.

Tardy comers found the doors locked and they had to wait until 11 o'clock, when a second show was given, but they waited patiently in the lobby until their time came.

And every one of the little folk had a "grand and glorious" time if their enthusiastic applause can be excepted as any indication. The Feirbanks style of funnaking—quiet, but amusing—and his agile gymnastics made a great hit with the youngsters. Just as the first picture was drawing to a close one small, auburn-topped, freckled-face youth with all the astute wisdom of eight years on this worldly globe, edged up to his companion in wisdom of eight years on this worldly globe, edged up to his companion in pleasure and ecstatically whispered the contents of a brilliant idea that
