Corn established a new high price record. The reasons were that the bog market still was soaring, and that the latest reckon-ings put the domestic farm reserves of corn at the lowest aggregate since 1897. Oats responded in lively fashien to the strength of other grain. Trade was much arger thin recently has been the case, and it was said rural offerings also had in-reased. Urgent export demand for lard was a factor in hoisting the entire provision market to unprecedented levels. Other causes were the continuance of the hog shortage and of the remarkable accompanying advance of the value of corn.
