POSTMASTERS MUST PASS EXAMINATION

Burleson Announces Nasbys of First, Second and Third Class to Undergo Tests.

POLITICAL PLAY CHARGED

Washington, March 7.—Postmaster General Burleson announced today, that after April 1, the appointment of all postmasters of the first, second and third class would be subject to competitive examinations. Nominations will be sent to the senate as in the past, but in making selections the president will be guided by the results of examinations and will send in the names at the head of the lists. Whether the civil service commission, under which fourth class postmasters are now named, will conduct the examinations, has not been determined. The president's forthcoming order will provide for a form of modified civil service classification under which all vacancies, whether caused by resignation, removal or death, will be filled by competitive examination. Can Serve Out Terms. Those already in the service will continue without examination until the expiration of four years' term, beginning with their last appointment, and will then, it is understood, have to undergo the competitive test. A hornet's nest was stirred up by the announcement at the capitol, where scores of members were in their offices preparing to leave for home. The order was roundly denounced because some of the democratic leaders and several members considered it as a move to get combined democratic and republican support in a politically uncertain hour. Democratic Leader Kitchin of the house delayed his departure for North Carolina to go to the Postoffice department to register his protest. Southern Member Talks. Other congressmen, who visited Mr. Burleson on the latter's invitation, to discuss the new plan of systematizing postal accounting by establishing central auditing postoffices in county or district groups. This subject was overwhelmed, however, when the news of the civil service order was broken. One southern member asked if the postmaster general had called them there to ask their views or to tell them what had been done. "I am telling you what is going to happen," he replied. The postmaster general is quoted as having told them that it was too late to protest as the order had been determined upon and would be carried out. He intimated that he was not the author of it, but that it was a measure of efficiency and economy. Blow to Democrats. Another member suggested that the order would put many republicans in office, as many of the more active assistant postmasters are republicans resistant to the democratic postmasters and still another wanted to know what would happen if the one man certified from the examinations was a negro. The postmaster general, according to those present, replied the examination would have to take place and there would be "special privileges to no one." A western democrat asked why the order, if issued at all, should not provide for notifying the three highest in the examination as eligible to postmasterships, as was done when the fourth class postmasters were blanketed into civil service. The postmaster general said congress had the opportunity of legislating to that effect, but did not do so. Some members complained that the order would take out of political life some of the most active supporters of the representatives in congress. A majority of the republicans joined with democrats recently in rejecting a proposition for putting all postmasters under the civil service, when an amendment to that effect was offered to an appropriation bill in the house, although Republican Leader Mann said a few others favored it.

In reargument before the supreme court of the federal dissolution suit against the Harvester company, Attorney General Gregory presented as medical evidence the reason for seeking disintegration of the so-called trust. He declared that the intent of congress to prohibit concentration of capital and restraint of competition were not carried out, government control, if not ownership in all likelihood would follow, with its evils and dangers. Republican opposition to the confirmation of Dr. Cary Z.
