lators of languages. Some suggests that various grades be created to correspond to the ordinary official nomenclature viz: Private, corporal, sergeant, for the minor positions, and second and first lieutenants, captain and major for the higher ones.

The assumption is that in time of war there are many things which technically trained women can do as well, or better, than men, and that, as a matter of patriotic duty, women should offer their services for the work they are best fitted to do, thus making available for the field a large part of the male population.

Great Britain today has over two million women employed in industries which before the war were considered exclusively men's occupations. They are employed in glass works, in packing houses, in blacksmithing, attrect cleaning, flour milling, chimney sweeping, farming and gardening. They work as brakemen and engine cleaners on railroads. They stoke coal, lay brick, work as braziers in machine shops and run lathes. They clean windows of office buildings and turn and bore shells. They are employed in boiler shops where they rivet boiler shells and sokestacks. In England and France together nearly five million women are now not only doing the work of men, but are earning men's wages.

In Fran e from the beginning of the war women were employed both in industries and, in the various war departments for all kinds of duties. Women are now even performing garrison duty in the French forts in the rear. They are guarding plants—the same work that our National Guard is doing now—and are even guarding prisoners, in order to relieve men for nore urgent duties.

CARL ECKSTROM

Omaha movie fans will have an op portunity this week to see Carl Eckstrom, an Omaha boy who has made a name for himself on the speaking stage. He appears Thursday and Friday at the Sun theater, playing opposite Stuart Holmes in the latest William Fox photoplay, "The Derelict," Mr. Eckstrom's mother and brother still live in Omaha at 2201 Lothrop street, his brother, Fred Eckstrom, being credit man for the Edholm Jewelry company. Carl has appeared in many successful plays, notable among them "The Shepherd King," and was in the original "Seven Days' company that played two solid years on Broadway. He has been leading man for Grace George and appeared last season with Margaret Anglin and this year is leading man in the support of Arnold Daly in "The Master." Fred Eckstrom is in receipt of a letter from a Carl, in which he says in part: "I have just completed an engagement with the William Fox picture people and, believe me, I had the time of my dear young life. I, like many other people of the stage, have had a sort of horror for this movie business that as been so affecting the speaking stage. But, believe me, Fred, just as soon as I can make arrangements with any of the film companies whereby I can call at the office and get my money for my service every week at their coffers, me for them; that is,

And if I do say it with some pride, I accomplished some splendid work in this picture. I think that it will be released under the title of 'The Derelict,' and if it comes to Omaha, which I suppose it will, I want you to be sure and go see it. Gee, won't some of my friends be surprised to see me as an actor, for you know, Fred, that since I have been an actor It seems to be fate that I never have appeared in Omaha, but then potatoes are pretty high now and I might be induced to come now sometime."

"Our children cannot spell correctly; they know little if anything of fundamentals; they have been taught to skim over the surface of things; a smattering of a subject has been accepted as a satisfactory attainment;
frivolity is encouraged—frivolity that sticks all through life, in marriage, character building, everywhere. Nothing is taken seriously, for no one is
