To the Prospective Home Buyer
Notice to You

You have no doubt read our ads in regard to our going out of the house building business. We have six 5-room cottages, twelve 6-room cottages and two 7-room. These houses are all modern and in A1 location, picked out by us as very desirable locations to help if possible in the sale of these homes.

BUT the most important point in house building is to put the best there is on the market in lumber in each house and to employ the best workmanship possible. This we have done and with our ten years' experience along these lines we have reached a point of the last word in efficiency in building homes along these lines at the lowest possible figure. You, therefore, will find that each and every one of these houses will more than come up to your expectation of how a house should be built, and you will be able to buy any one of these homes at figures far below what you could possibly build for. AND THE REASON IS: We are going out of the house building business and you, therefore, get an opportunity that you possibly never will get again, to buy a new home at less than it would cost you to build one. Prices range from $1,500 to $6,500.

The date of this big sale will be announced the last of this week. If you desire to look over these houses before the sale call our office and we will take you out in one of our machines any time and show them to you. We are at your service. Call Douglas 1009 any time.

LONDON HONORS AN AMERICAN ARTIST

Gathering at St. Paul's Cathedral Pays Respect to Edwin Austin Abbey.

ONE OF BIG ILLUSTRATORS

(Correspondence of The Associated Press.)

London, March 30.—Many distinguished people forgot the stress of war for at least an hour the other day to repair to St. Paul's cathedral to pay tribute to the memory of an American artist, Edwin Austin Abbey, who, through his work, has been more or less closely identified with the artistic side of English life.

The gathering was headed by the American ambassador, Walter Hines Page and the Princess Louise, Duchess of Argyll. It assembled in the artists' corner of the crypt where are the graves of Turner and many more distinguished English artists, and unveiled a tablet to the memory of Abbey. It was here that Abbey used to visit.

Ambassador Page delivered the principal speech, sketching Abbey's career from his birthplace, Philadelphia.

"Mr. Abbey's grandfather," said Mr. Page, "who was a merchant in Philadelphia, amused himself with his pencil and brush, and his father, also a merchant, cultivated the same talent. Once when Mr. Abbey was asked how he got his commission for painting the coronation of King Edward, he is said to have answered:

"'Through my grandfather.'"

The ambassador said that Mr. Abbey spent twenty years on the staff of a New York publishing house. "When he came to England he had a commission also to illustrate an article on Shakespeare," said Mr. Page. "For all I know to the contrary the great project of illustrating Shakespeare may date from that first visit to the poet's birthplace. From that day forward England took him and held him.

Work in Two Parts.

"Abbey's work fell into two parts, first, his illustrative work, beginning in his youth with Dickens' Christmas Stories and including Herrick, Keats, Wordsworth, Goldsmith, and ending with his great illustrations of Shakespeare. He was surely one of the greatest illustrators of his time. It is upon these black and white drawings that no doubt most of the admirers of his work think that his most secure fame rests.

"The second period of Mr. Abbey's work was given to mural painting for the ennobling and beautifying of American public buildings. On this work he was engaged when he died in 1911 at the too early age of 59. With appropriateness his decorations of the Boston Public library represent scenes from the Quest of the Holy Grail. Throughout the United States you will find more reproduction of these pictures and of Mr. Sargent's Prophets, in the same building, than of any other modern paintings.

"In happier times, when thousands of Abbey's countrymen resume their pilgrimage to their old home, many of them will feel a warmer welcome to this, one of the great sanctuaries of our race, because of its hospitality to him; and they will thank you for placing this tablet here as I thank you now. It is another link in the endless chain that binds all parts of the English-speaking world together and will forever hold them true to their common high ideals."

A Backhander.

"Elihu Root's recent letter to the anti-suffrage convention was a backhanded slap."

The speaker, a woman herself, set her jaw grimly.

"Elihu's letter talked in the main about unconstitutionality, whatever that it, but it was really an indirect slap at us.

"It reminded me of Mrs. Stinger.

"'Did Jane Guff ever say anything to you about me?' a woman asked Mrs. Stinger.

"'No, never,' Mrs. Stinger replied. 'If Jane Guff can't say anything good of a person, she don't never say nothing.'"—Washington Star.
