revise it. The original cards are already available and at the service of the public.

"It is probable there is no other state having at the present time such a fine listing of its population," said Mr. Williams. "The work was done under the direction of the state executive council, which planned it well. The original material was gathered by the assessors. The work of getting back the returns and having the tables compiled was done by A. U. Swan and that he did the work well is proven by the fact that more than one incompetent who thought that the state would stand for any kind of poor work clashed with him when he held them to a strict accounting for accurate work. All this material was put into the census book we issued last year. I am proud of the little part I had in arranging the tables and comparisons and writing the story of Iowa progress therefrom. But the best of it is that the material is here and ready for use when much of it is really needed in a way not contemplated at the time."
