The socialist ministers at a recent ministerial council said that the only possibility they saw of settling the difficulties was to bring the war to a close.

Neither the coalition cabinet nor the newly appointed commission to regulate the difficulties between capital and labor has yet found a way to settle the industrial crisis.

The commission is composed of the ministers of finance, trade and industry and labor, but since there is a wide divergence of views between the minister of finance and the new socialist minister of finance and the new socialist minister of labor, it seems probable that this commission will be confronted with the same difficulties that attended previous efforts at reconfilation.

The outstanding features of the labor situation are as follows:

An investigation shows that virtually the same difficulties prevail in all the big factories in Petrograd and apparently authenticated reports from the Moscow, Donets and Ural districts indicate general disorganization.

In many of the factories the demands by the workmen for increased wages are actually greater than the entire profit of the factories under the best conditions of production. The workmen, through their committee, are virtually in command of the the best conditions of production. The workmen, through their committee, are virtually in command of the factories and all business has to be submitted to them for approval. The wages in a majority of the factories have already been increased from 100 to 150 per cent. But there has yet been no offset by an advance in the prices of the output.

Not only have the prices of products not met the advance in wages, but payment has been so slow that industry is in urgent need of working capital. The dealers find it difficult to borrow money, as the banks naturally are not eager to extend credit to factories which are in control of temporary workmen's committees. As a result some of the factories, according to this information, will be compelled to close within a month.

a month. An ironical feature of the difficulties confronting the employers is the fact that although suffering serious loss they do not dare to close the stablishments owing to threats of bodily and material vengeance. The power of the workmen's committees so far has superceded the authority of the owners. No man in a factory can be dismissed without the consent of the committees. of the committees.
