Miller Park Mothers' Circle Raises Old Glory

"Ever since the flag was designed it has signified benevolence, heroism and liberty," Judge S. I. Gordon told a well attended gathering at the Miller Park Mothers' circle flag raising Wednesday afternoon. He reviewed the causes of the civil war and praised the soldiers who had so gallantly defended the Stars and Stripes.

"All over the South repose unknown dead who gave their lives to save the nation. To them and the flag we owe the highest honors."

The flag, 18x25 feet, was donated by a citizen who requested that his name be withheld from the papers. The Miller flag pole, on which "Old Glory" was flung to the breezes, is the highest in the city.

Children of Miller Park school sang patriotic songs and were joined by other persons in the audience.

Rev. John Calvert of Benson Methodist church opened the ceremonies with prayer. Miss Jennie Olive, teacher in Monmouth Park school, led the singing of patriotic songs and Mrs. John W. Evans recited Riley's "Old Glory." Howard Thornton, bugler from Fort Omaha, sounded taps.

Mrs. T. P. Davis, president, and Mrs. B. B. Anderson, secretary of Miller Park Mothers' circle, had charge of the memorial services.

Will Can Supplies for The Families of Soldiers

The commissariat department of the National League for Woman Service, of which Mrs. E. W. Sifert is acting superintendent, says, "We hope that any who have vegetables or glass jars to donate will communicate with us. We want food conserved to be sold or given by this office to needy families of soldiers."

"We are the cooking and purchasing end of the national league and had planned to provide demonstrators to show the people of Omaha the best methods of preserving food before we learned that the extension department of the University of Nebraska was going to conduct a canning school here," says Mrs. Sifert, "and now we are glad to co-operate with this school. I expect to send fifteen or twenty delegates, who are members of the commissariat division, to be trained in the first canning school. Our delegates will be pledged to teach the certain groups of women in Omaha the new arts."

Canning School Graduates Will Give Services Free

A fruit and vegetable canning school is being conducted at the Nebraska Wesleyan university at University Place. Eighty-five students are in attendance. Today will be the last of the three-day course. Nearly all the girls taking the course are pledging their services free during the summer to any one in their reach who may want to learn the processes of canning.

Many Girls Learn How To Can at the State Uni

Two hundred and sixty girls attended the State university canning school, the exhibition of whose work is on display in the Agricultural hall in Lincoln. Miss Maud Wilson of the college extension department is credited with the success of the school, says Mrs. A. E. Davison, who was also active in its organization.

CANNING SCHOOLS ARE TO OPEN HERE

University Extension Experts to Instruct in Art of Putting Up Fruits and Vegetables.

"Canning schools will be conducted in Omaha beginning June 11 to continue as long as there is demand for them," says Miss Maud Wilson of the University Extension Service in Nebraska. "These schools will not be limited to women, but men are also invited. Mrs. Paul S. Rivets of Florence, formerly a member of the Extension Service Department of the university, is re-employed, and will with Miss Margaret Long teach the first school in this city."

"Fifty persons can be taught in the first school; and it is the intention of the managers to limit the attendants to those who pledge their services at any time during the summer when their neighbors may want instruction regarding the processes learned. Thus at first the training is intended as a normal course for volunteers who want to aid in the spreading of the improved arts of preserving vegetables and fruit."

To Dry Vegetables.

"Besides, canning, which is to receive the major portion of the attention, the new process of drying will be taught. The way to make a drying machine will be shown, as well as the art of cutting and preparing vegetables and of storing the dried product. Laboratory work will be in the mornings and lectures in the afternoons. A hand grist mill will be used at the schools to grind corn and wheat."

"Interpreters may be provided from the state university in order that separate schools may be conducted for people in Omaha speaking Swedish, German and Bohemian."

"The cost of attending the schools will be determined by the prices of vegetables and other material used. Each student will be charged an enrollment fee sufficient to cover the expense of fuel and of vegetables. It was 75 cents in Lincoln, but is expected to be less in Omaha."
