SOUTH SIDE RESTAURANT MAN IS BADLY BRUISED

Physical Encounter With Alleged Partner Results in the Aggressor Participant Fined in Court.

Nick Johns, restaurant owner at 4903 South Twenty-fourth street, appeared in South Side police court this morning bruised and battered and testified that Sam Nicholas, who had never paid a cent in on the restaurant, but who called himself "partner" and acted like the owner, had told him that he would run him out of business and had enforced his words by beating him on the head with a chair.

Nicholas, big and muscular, testified: "I wash my face and go in to eat breakfast, I say nice soft words to him. I no hit him with chair. I only push him in his face with my hand," and he doubled up his fist and shoved it under the nose of the judge in illustration of the gentle push he had given his "partner."

"Didn't you steal from your own 17-year-old brother?"

"Haven't you been taking advantage of your countrymen who don't know much about business?"

"Didn't you get 'in bad' in Plattsmouth?"

"Aren't you just a common crook?"

Prosecutor Anheuser, who said he has the man's "number," fired these questions at him.

Nicholas was fined $50 and costs.

Home-Cured Hams Cause Investigation on South Side

"We don't pay much attention to fellows with big bank rolls or a string of diamonds, but a fellow with two home-cured hams surely arouses suspicion," said Desk Sergeant Smith, as he wrote a description of the man who tried to sell two hams at the home of Moses Godford, Twenty-eighth and Harrison streets, this morning.

"Two hams represents too much wealth. We can hardly believe that a man could accumulate so much honestly, so we shall investigate it," said the police.

The man was dark complected and smooth shaven. He is probably some 30 years old and weighs about 165 pounds.
