Don't you know that everything west of the Missouri river is the nat-ural and rightful heritage of Omaha, the metropolitan city of the richest section of the great middle west? What business has Kansas City to occupy a greater area and hold a greater place commercially and financially than Omaha? What's the reason? I'll tell you. Kansas City is awake and Omaha is asleep. Down in wells of the Kansas City companies, the Oklahoma City companies, the Wichita companies, etc., but no Omaha companies. In the Kansas City Journal of August 5 there is this quotation from Frank G. Carpenter: "Notwithstanding we are producing more petroleum than ever before, the output last year was almost 300,000,000 barrels, the prices have risen and the supply is all used. We now need all we can produce as never before and every patriot will aid the government in trying to save gasoline, which is such a vital necessity to the industrial life of the proportions, and it is now as important as gunpowder and shells." There are in use in the United States 4,000,000 automobiles, and figuring the annual consumption of each at the low average of 500 gallens, it will take 2,000,000,000 gallons to supply our home requirements. That is, we need about a half billion gallons more gas for this purpose alone than we were making in the whole country three years ago, and the demand for export now is appalling, for our allies must look to us for their main supply. Now, I have just returned from this astonishing new oil field near Wichita, and after careful investigation and data gathered, I am convinced that there are greater opportunities there now than when the field was first opened. The structure is revealing itself in continuity with every well that
