Omaha corn receipts were 114 carloads and the prices were off 7 to 11 cents from Friday, the sales being made at $1.95@2.00.

The sharp decline in corn prices is attributed largely to the passing of the cool spell and the return of hot · weather over a greater portion of the corn belt. It is asserted that all indications point to the continuance of the warm and drying weather for several days, all of which is helping to make a bumper corn crop in practically all of Omaha trade territory,

A good many of the local grain men are of the opinion that with another week of warm weather, 90 per cent of the Nebraska corn will be out of the way of frost.

The oats market was in sympathy with corn, but the decline was only a cent to a cent and a fourth. The sales were made at 58@581/2 cents a bushel, with forty-three carloads on the market.
