

WEBSTER SURPRISES FRIENDS OF ART

Invites Them to the Library to See How He Has Fitted Up the New Exhibit.

Liberty bonds or no Liberty bonds, John Lee Webster, president of the Friends of Art, remains steadfast to his ideal of an art gallery for Omaha.

"Even though this country is plunged in war, education of the people and the love of art must be encouraged," said Mr. Webster.

With this thought in mind, Mr. Webster had the walls of the two rooms in the public library where paintings purchased by local art lovers are hung redecorated in a pleasing gray, rehanging the canvases and invited the executive committee of the Society of Fine Arts to a "little surprise" at the library.

Besides the newly decorated galleries, the "surprise" included several new paintings, one a scene in India by Weckes, which the Friends of Art probably will purchase.

More than thirty canvases are now hung in the library. Mr. Webster hopes to secure permission from the library board to use a third room in which to hang paintings. This will give over the entire third floor of the building for the art collection. Pictures are also hung along the staircase.

"With such a space set aside for art exhibition purposes, we can induce eastern artists to send us their works for exhibition for several months at a time. When these are returned, other paintings can be shown," said Mr. Webster.

ROWE SAYS HE'LL STICK BY WIFE IN COURT FIGHT

and poisoned her against Mr. Rowe and herself their friendship was unusually close and their confidence mutual.

"I will be able to disprove every charge made against Mr. Rowe and myself when the case comes to trial," said Mrs. Rowe, "but I cannot tell how much I regret it all because even after we clear our names in court there will be certain persons who will refuse to believe the truth. It is a plain case of attempted blackmail."

Names Blond Woman. Mrs. Hale recently brought divorce action against her husband. She alleged extreme cruelty and infidelity, naming a "blond woman prominent socially" as the co-respondent. Her attorneys says Mrs. Rowe is the "blond woman."

The Hales have been married twenty years and have two children, who are with the mother. The couple separated about four months ago. Mrs. Hale in her alienation suit says Mrs. Rowe two years ago "designed and set about the task of winning the affections of her husband."

She alleges they met at the Rowe home on frequent occasions during the absence of the husband.

Poisoned Against Her. As a result, Mrs. Hale declares, and "by protestations of love and flattery, deceptions and promises made to her husband, Mrs. Rowe poisoned his mind against her."

She sets forth that Mrs. Rowe "enticed the general yardmaster from his home for the purpose of having clandestine meetings with him."

Mrs. Hale says her husband lavished upon Mrs. Rowe "candy, fruit, clothing and other presents too numerous to mention." The wife alleges these presents were received in order to "further carry out the unlawful and wicked scheme and design of wrecking and ruining her home."

Stay Out Late Nights. On June 24, Mrs. Hale alleges, Mrs. Rowe succeeded in persuading her and her husband and persuaded him to make his home with the wife's family. Mrs. Hale alleges that since that time they have been automobile riding together and "staying out late nights."

She says her husband has spent the larger part of his earnings upon Mrs. Rowe.

"Mr. Rowe's part in the alleged 'scheme,'" Mrs. Hale says, has been to "encourage his wife when she entertained and received the railroad man."

Mrs. Hale insists that she has been "caused great pain and humiliation, and has entirely lost the affection of her husband."

Sutton, McKenzie, Cox & Harris are attorneys for Mrs. Hale.

Sells Tea Under the Pretense it is Whisky

Joe Tyler, colored, 413 North Thirtieth street, is an industrious chap. He has a keen outlook for well paying business methods, and last night sought to take advantage of the apparent absence of police officers about his place by attempting to dispose of cold tea under the appearance of whisky, at the exorbitant price of $2 a pint.

Several of his friends complained to the police of his dishonest methods and Detectives Anderson and Buell started on a tour of investigation about Tyler's surroundings.

They discovered Tyler busily engaged in a "laboratory," situated in the rear of his yard, filling discarded whisky bottles with the Japanese beverage, and then neatly labelling same. A search of the place revealed two quarts of whisky with which he said he foiled his customers by showing the liquor to them and saying that the newly filled pint bottles contained the same. Subsequently, Tyler sold several bottles of the "fake" liquor, he admitted.

The officers brought him to the police station where he is charged with two offenses—illegal possession of intoxicating liquor, and obtaining money under false pretenses.

Kansas City Grain Men Pleased With Exchange

C. A. Dayton, prominent grain man of Kansas City, is in Omaha, the guest of his old friend, Charles A. Neal, national food administration agent. It was the first time Mr. Dayton has ever been on the floor of the Omaha Grain Exchange. He was greatly pleased with the building, as well as with the methods that the Omaha grain men have employed in doing business.

LIEUTENANT POST TELLS HOW HE USED FIRST KITE BALLOON AT VLADIVOSTOK IN JAP WAR

Chief Engineer at Fort Omaha is Training Students There in the Use of Secrets Learned From Germans; Was An Officer in Russian Army; Son in Aviation Corps.

Ak-Sar-Ben visitors who watched with interest the huge kite balloons floating above Fort Omaha daily, will be interested in this picture, which shows the first kite balloon ever used in actual warfare.

The picture was taken by Lieutenant Post, chief engineer of Fort Omaha, at Vladivostok in the beginning of the Russo-Japanese war. His rank in the Russian army was lieutenant colonel. He had taken training at the aeronautical school in St. Petersburg.

He was then at Vladivostok as military engineer and, in desperation, Admiral Essen, commander of the Russian fleet, called upon him for help.

Lieutenant Colonel Post at once introduced balloons for observation of the Japanese movements. At first round balloons were used, these made by Lieutenant Colonel Post, himself. But the winds were too strong for these in that region and at once kite balloons were imported from Germany.

While Germany invented and manufactured these, she never yet had used them in warfare, so, Lieutenant Colonel Post says, to Russia belongs the honor of this. Now Mr. Post is chief engineer at Fort Omaha and is employing against the Germans all the secrets they taught him twelve years ago at Vladivostok.

Served in Russ Army. Lieutenant Post is one of the most interesting persons at Fort Omaha, that gathering-ground of notables in the aeronautical field. He is chief engineer at the fort, formerly was lieutenant colonel in the Russian army and the man who introduced balloon observation in the Russo-Japanese war.

"Lieutenant Colonel Fedor Alexis Post-nikov," is the way they write it on the czar's muster roll. At present he is simply "Lieutenant Post, aviation section of the signal corps, United States army," though soon a higher commission is promised him in recognition of his experience and skill.

One of his feats back in Petrograd was the finding from a balloon of some sunken vessels in the Gulf of Finland, which had been unseen from the deck of steamers. At the outbreak of the Japanese war the Japs destroyed the best part of the battleships of the Pacific Russian fleet in a night, and then placed hundreds of mines around Vladivostok to prevent the Russian battleships at Port Arthur. Small Russian steamers worked hard to find these hidden mines, but experienced much difficulty.

Aided Admiral Essen. It was then that Admiral Essen of the Russian fleet remembered the lieutenant colonel Post had been able to see sunken barges near Petrograd from a balloon. The admiral sent at once for Lieutenant Post and asked him if he could locate mines as well.

"Better," answered Colonel Post. "The waters here are clearer than the sea at St. Petersburg at the Neva's delta, where I found the barges. Also, mines are usually nearer the surface than the vessels."

"Could you build a balloon, if material were furnished you?" "Yes," was the answer. Russian officers trained at the aeronautical school learn to build as well as manage balloons.

At once Admiral Essen advanced Lieutenant Post the money and told him to go to work. But where to find materials in Vladivostok, so far from the centers of the world's civilization?

"That first balloon was a funny sight!" laughed Lieutenant Colonel Post. "I had to get figured, striped and plaid silk, as well as plain. The gas bag looked like Joseph's coat."

First In History. "We managed to manufacture some gas and got a basket. Then we found cordage to tie the two together and sent the balloon up from the deck of a cruiser."

"That was the first time in the history of the world a balloon was used to help the navy, although as far back as the French revolution, balloons were employed by armies."

This odd-looking balloon, the first made by Colonel Post over in Vladivostok, he christened, "Esperanto," in honor of the international language, Esperanto. This language, by the way, is Lieutenant Post's hobby. He speaks it fluently and hopes soon to see it the international language.

Soon the round balloons were found to be unserviceable, because of the high winds about Vladivostok, and a new invention of the Germans, a balloon with a long, sausage-shaped, bag, was sent for.

That was the first time a kite balloon was ever employed in actual warfare.

This kite balloon proved useful to the Russians, who sent it up from a cruiser to hunt for mines and watch the maneuvers of the Japanese ships. At present Lieutenant Post is teaching the students at Fort Omaha how to employ against the Germans in this war the very secrets they imparted to him when he got from them the first kite balloon ever used in war.

With Lieutenant Post at Vladivostok, twelve years ago, was a sturdy little fellow, his 8-year-old son. The little lad often went up with his father in the balloon.

So, now that he is a tall young chap, he takes to the air as the duck to its pond. Out at San Diego, in the aviation school, Leo Post, this same boy, is training at Uncle Sam's flying school and expects soon to be commissioned to fight in the air against Germany.

Omaha Division Point For the Western Electric

With the appointment, effective Wednesday, of H. H. Goodell, present manager of the local branch of the Western Electric company, as assistant central district manager for the company with his offices here, Omaha becomes the headquarters for the western part of the company's central district with the Minneapolis and Des Moines branches tributary.

This change marks a division of the work previously handled by the Chicago offices and will make a decided increase in the volume of business handled at the local headquarters.

Other local men affected by the change are A. H. Bannister, for the past few years local sales manager, who is transferred to Minneapolis as northwestern sales manager, and M. A. Buehler, the Omaha apparatus specialist, who succeeds Mr. Bannister as local sales manager.

Electric Equipment Saves Fuel for the Milwaukee

The Milwaukee Railroad company makes the assertion that by reason of the electrification of its lines over the mountains in Montana, Idaho and Washington during the last year, on the one division it has conserved 200,000 tons of coal. This quantity would have been required for the coal burning engines that have been replaced by those operated by electric current.

Not only has there been a conservation of fuel, but there has been a conservation of power, it being figured that with the coal burning engines in operation it would have required 5,000 cars to transport the coal and 1,756 cars to handle the oil for lubrication and other equipment.

Urges Elevator Owners to Guard Against Fires

General Manager Jeffers of the Union Pacific, in the interest of the conservation of foodstuffs, is sending out circulars urging that extra precaution be taken to guard against fires that might destroy the grain in storage in elevators.

Mr. Jeffers urges the company agents to get in line with the elevator men along the lines of the road and induce them to clean up around their buildings, removing all accumulations of inflammable material and rubbish. He also urges that where glass has been broken out of the windows of elevators, it should be replaced in order to keep the birds out of these buildings. He suggests that the nests of birds, either in the building, or under the eaves are very inflammable and in the past have been responsible for numerous fires that have been set by sparks from the passing engines.
