The Best Temperance Workers

How History Repeats Itself:

A hundred years ago Thomas Jefferson, in writing to Mr. De Neuville in advocacy of the culture of the grape in this country said:

"No nation is drunken where wine is cheap, and none sober where the dearness of wine substitutes ardent spirits as the common beverage."

This was before the era of brewing in America, but shortly after this we find Jefferson writing to a friend of his in the Virginia Legislature, in behalf of a certain Captain Miller "who is about to settle in our country and to establish a brewery"...."I wish to see this beverage become common," said Jefferson.

Nearly a century later, we find Dr. Andrew D. White, former President of Cornell University, and Ambassador to European countries, saying in his autobiography:

"The best temperance workers that I know are the men who brew light, pure beers, and the wine growers of California."

The justification for beer as a True Temperance Beverage consists in the fact that over 90% of it is water.

The solid matter of which beer is made consists of the extract of hops and cereals (principally barley malt). These comprise about 5%.

The alcohol in beer, which averages less than 4%, is not put in by the brewer, but is produced by natural fermentation of the yeast as in wine and cider.

After a hundred years of experiment, we find public opinion in this country veering back to the principle laid down by Thomas Jefferson, that beer is essentially a TRUE TEMPERANCE BEVERAGE!

The United States Brewers' Association
