While you are at home Christmas night beside the warm fire, many American boys over there in France will be out in the cold in blood-smeared trenches.

While you are receiving presents off the Christmas tree, many of our American soldiers may be dodging death from bomb and shrapnel.

Are you giving them the courage to fight for you and yours?

Are you backing them up with your Membership in the Red Cross—with your moral and financial support?

Or are You letting that boy die—that boy lying there amid the tangle of barbed wire in No-Man's Land—because You—You, an American citizen—did not help the Red Cross to Save him?

Christmas is at Hand. Be the Good Samaritan.

You don't have to endure the horrors of the trenches.

You don't have to hear the cries of the wounded.

You don't have to hear the death groans of the dying.

You don't have to lead the battle-blinded humans.

You don't have to carry the shell-torn bodies back from the front.

You don't have to feed starving war orphans.
