English Experts Perfect Devices to Find Submarines

Stockholm, Dec. 26.-Two of the methods by which the British are effectively fighting the German submarine are by the use of new microphone detectors and explosive bombs of enormous power, according to a writer in the Tidningen, an authority on technical information. English experts have lately so perfeeted the use of the microphone on antisubmarine vessels, says the writer, that they are able to steer accurately and automatically down on the submarine, while formerly they eath the surface. The detection instruments used with the microphones are very complex. One of them shows the distance of the submarine on a graduated scale, the indicator responding electrically to the sound from the submarine's propellors. The variations of distance are shown with marvellous accuracy. Another device shows whether the enemy is on the port or starboard side. The electro magnet hand moves to the side on which the sound is loudest and the ship is guided accordingly.

When the proper spot is reached bombs are dropped in the same manher as from airplanes. Their under water force is so great that they can the point of explosion.
