Chiropractic Talks

CHIROPRACTIC FOR RHEUMATISM

The cause of rheumatism has been a subject of discussion from the earliest time, and while Chiropractic does not deny the presence of foreign micro-organisms in the tissues of the rheumatic person or the acid condition of the sweat and urine, its claim is that these are only secondary causes, and that the true etiology of the disease is to be looked for elsewhere.

Foreign micro-organisms always gather where there is a call for their service. They are the scavengers of Nature, and are found only where there is an inflammatory condition or a breaking down of the tissues of the body. This would account for the fact that investigators have found, not one particular kind, but many varieties of these little micro-organisms in different cases of rheumatism. Neither do these micro-organisms produce the acids that are always present in cases of true rheumatism, but on the contrary, they are drawn to the painful area by the presence of the inflammatory condition which is produced in part by the acids that are deposited in the tissues.

Rheumatism is an acute or chronic inco-ordination of nerves, muscles, articulations, membranes or bones, characterized by pain, swelling, redness, fever, and sometimes deformity.

Muscular rheumatism is a form in which the site of pain is localized in the nerve endings of muscles or their point of attachment; in this form the onset is sudden, with pain of increasing intensity upon muscular action.

One of many muscles may be affected; when localized in the intercostal muscles it is called pleurodynia; when in the lumbar muscles it is called lumbago, and when in the hip, thigh or elsewhere, it is called myalgia.

The acute attack is accompanied with fever of a moderate degree, with intense pain, the patient being unable to move the affected muscles, or, perhaps, unable to roll over in bed.

There is a muscular contraction which may be continual or spasmodic, and the individual is usually constipated.

When the intercostal muscles are affected respiration is greatly hindered, the attack lasts one or two weeks and may become chronic. In this form the pain is less intense and more intermittent.

There is perhaps no ailment more common from which so many people suffer and for which so little relief can be obtained, yet Chiropractic handles this condition with a great degree of success; 95 per cent of all cases obtain permanent relief after taking Chiropractic adjustment.

There are many forms of rheumatism and it may occur in different parts of the body affecting different individuals in a different manner.

Chiropractors have proven that rheumatism is caused by nerve pressure, by carefully palpating the spine of a patient afflicted, locating the displaced or subluxated vertebrae and adjusting them back toward their normal position, thereby releasing the impingement or nerve pressure, thus allowing free and uninterrupted transmission of nerve force or mental impulse access to the affected part or parts, which restores the patient to normal through Nature's way.

Chiropractic holds out a helping hand to every sufferer of rheumatism, be it acute or chronic. If you are one of those who have obtained complete and permanent relief from rheumatism from Chiropractic adjustments.
