Wait for Him

Miss Fairfax, Omaha Bee: I am going to wait for him. I have waited for four years. We parted because my parents objected, but feel that I still care for that man, though I am in doubt if my life would have been happy. First, a young man asked for me, but I did not marry him, perhaps because he was very wealthy and that was why my parents are so opposed to his coming. In the meanwhile he has married and, to be honest, it gives me a sad feeling when I think of it. Then I became engaged to a fine young man, but he was so selfish and thoughtless in lots of things which girls admire. For instance, he never remembered me on my birthday and took so much for granted. We gradually drifted apart and finally have parted. Now, here is the question—all through my school days, my boy, now a young man fighting for his country, has stood by me through all my joys and sorrows. He never believed in going to party dances and often asked me not to go, but I saw no harm in it. And because of never associating with other fellows very much, not going much of any place but church, he was termed a snob, and most of my best friends term him as such. He has always professed his love to me and I have told him that I do not believe I have loved any one enough to marry him. He believes that he can make me love him in time and I know that he would be a good husband and a good father. I am now 25, he is 26. But it seems that I must have a home. Should I wait until

Advice to Lovelorn

Dear Miss Fairfax: Is it not permissible for a man and a woman to be sweethearts even though both are legally separated—she from her husband and he from his wife? Both are seeking a divorce. Both parties are clean living—by "clean living" I mean "straight." Do you not think it their right to see each other, with the understanding "that after both are free they will legally become man and wife?" J. M. C.

Right of the Individual

This is a question difficult to answer. While a mature man and woman, with well-developed senses of values and knowledge of what they want from life, may, indeed, be justified in modifying certain conventions and ignoring gossip. Still, if I tell them to do so, some boys and girls are going to misinterpret and apply to their own cases the advice I can give only to maturity. When a man and woman who have suffered, who have been disappointed in their ideals of love and happiness find each other, nature herself draws them close through the strength of their reaction from unhappiness and through their happiness in their affection for each other. If this man and woman conduct themselves with dignity and make their friendship fine and high minded it will eventually compel respect. I think, after all, that the whole thing depends on the basic fineness of their attitudes toward each other and on the calm dignity and bravery with which they face self-minded gossip. Everything in the world must be gained through the sacrifice of something else. To find their happiness with each other this man and woman must not sacrifice their own self-respect and consciousness of right, but they must gladly sacrifice acquaintance with cheap scandal mongers who rejoice in thinking evil and reporting evil.
