Mrs. Floyd C. Harding

THE war may have introduced flags and swords in the marriage service, but it has not been able to banish rice and rose leaves and old slippers for luck. Each one of these lovely brides carried a June shower of bride's roses and each one took their vows under the stary folds of the red, white and blue. True military weddings they were to the last shiny bar on the manly shoulders of uniformed ushers, and the stirring strains of the Star-Spangled Banner brought the guests to their feet as it ushered in the rainbow-hued bridesmaids, and the lovely bride, looking as though she stepped straight out of a dream.

We have had two of these striking military ceremonies during the last week. The wedding of Miss Lenore Williams to Lieutenant Irving Benolken last Saturday at Trinity cathedral. The noon day sun, shining through the stained glass windows, touched the white satin bride and her soldier-husband with a silent benediction as they passed under the crossed swords held by four brother officers.

Miss Edith Lillian Dovey, whose marriage to Lieutenant Floyd C. Harding took place Wednesday in Plattsmouth was a most attractive war-time bride. Her gown was of white organdy trimmed with filmy lace and her sisters who attended her were gowned in organdy also, all in the delicate pastel shades. Yellow roses were used in profusion in the church and made a striking splash of color among the palms and ferns.

Mrs. Herbert G. Hoffmann is another pretty bride of the week and in keeping with the military spirit she slipped a number of tiny silk flags in her bouquet and there they fluttered, vieing with the fragrant roses. Lieutenant Hoffman is stationed at Camp Dodge and there the young couple will make their home for the present. Fortunately these brides can accompany their husbands to their respective forts and the war-time wedding march, "Here comes the brides, and there goes the groom," would not be appropriate.
