

DOCTOR ALLISON, FAMOUS SURGEON OF OMAHA, DIES

Chief Surgeon of Four Local Hospitals Succumbs to Illness Which Overtook Him Last February.

Dr. Charles C. Allison, for more than 25 years one of Omaha's foremost surgeons, and known throughout the west for his high standing in the medical profession, died at 11:30 a. m. Wednesday at his home after an illness which overtook him last February. His ailment was at first pneumonia, from which he practically recovered, but later complications, combined with asthma, which he had previously had several times, led to heart trouble, to which he finally succumbed. He was at death's door a week ago, but pulled himself back by sheer strength. He was conscious and cheerful, and surrounded by his family to the end.

Native of Ohio. Dr. Allison was born December 6, 1866, in Hillsboro, O., and his aged parents, Mr. and Mrs. John B. Allison, still reside in that vicinity. As a boy he attended the village school at Loudan and taught in the same district, later going to St. Mary's college at St. Mary's, Kan., and graduated in medicine from Louisville (Ky.) Medical college.

After a start as hospital interne he went to New York, where he received an appointment as ship surgeon on the Holland line, but his ambition did not permit him to remain more than a year. He came west again in the spring of 1891, locating in Omaha, and immediately began to rise in the practice of his profession.

Work as Teacher. Dr. Allison's chief influence on his fellow medical men was exerted as a teacher. He occupied the chair of genito-urinary surgery in the Omaha Medical college, and later the professorship of the principle and practice of surgery in Creighton Medical college, his clinics, especially attended by students and outside graduates, proving most inspiring and instructive to the younger men. He was familiarly known and called by his associates "the chief," serving as he did as chief surgeon for St. Joseph's hospital and also for the Wise, the Presbyterian and St. Catherine's hospitals. In these hospitals, and also outside of them, he was incessant at his work and lavish with free attention to the afflicted poor whenever he felt himself able to help them.

2 POUNDS SUGAR PER PERSON PER MONTH, NEW RULE

Special Permit Required After Purchase of First 25 Pounds for Preserving; Requisitions Ordered.

Because of the critical sugar situation, drastic changes in the sugar rules were announced Wednesday by Gordon W. Wattles, federal food administrator for Nebraska. Consumers are requested to limit their consumption of sugar in the homes to two pounds per person per month; consumers in cities and towns can buy only two pounds for home consumption and five pounds in rural communities.

Sales of sugar are limited to 25 pounds to a family for canning and preserving purposes and a second purchase can be made only upon a special permit issued by the county food administrator.

These new regulations were made after advice from Herbert C. Hoover and are being sent to all county food administrators by Mr. Wattles. Administrator Hoover states the shortage is occasioned by shorter Cuban deliveries than was anticipated, larger consumption and losses through submarine sinking of sugar ships.

Manufacturers Affected. The restrictions also will reach out to manufacturers, says Wattles. His advice is that less essential manufacturers probably will be limited to 50 per cent of their requirements, instead of 80, after July 1; also that many essential manufacturers will be reclassified in the less essential division. Ice cream probably will be given a less essential classification.

To enforce the ruling requiring the filing of reports Mr. Wattles is asked to requisition all sugar in the possession of less essential manufacturers, who had not reported on June 10, and to requisition all excess sugar held by less essential manufacturers on July 1. Emphasis is also given that less essential manufacturers who failed to report will get no sugar this year.

All manufacturers using sugar can get it now only on presentation of certificates issued by the Omaha office. A comprehensive plan, with rules, is being worked out, putting retailers and hotels on a certificate basis, and will be announced soon, says Mr. Wattles.

John Batt, 605 North Sixteenth street, sold graham flour as a substitute and it is not down as one of the flour substitutes. John Pavlas let his customers have corn flakes as a substitute.
