

SAVINGS STAMPS SOCIETIES FOR ALL NEBRASKA

Meetings Will Be Held in Each School House in City and State Friday Night.

All Nebraska is to be organized for war activities by the creation of one or more war savings societies in every precinct of the state.

Meetings will be held in every school in the city of Omaha and in all of the district schools of Douglas county, in unison with those held all over the state at 8 o'clock Friday evening, June 28.

After permanent organization of the societies are effected they will meet regularly at appointed times thereafter. The purpose of the organizations will be to encourage the practice of economy, the denial of nonessential things during the duration of the war, the investment of money in thrift stamps or future issues of liberty bonds and to promote loyalty and assistance of the government in every way to win the war.

Prominent Speakers.
Prominent speakers from Omaha will appear at all of the school houses of the county on the night designated and will help in the organizations and explain the purposes of the meetings.

The following are the places in Douglas county, outside of Omaha, where the meetings will be held:

- Valley for Valley precinct.
- Waterloo for Waterloo precinct.
- Elkhorn for Elkhorn precinct.
- Millard for Millard precinct.
- Ralston for Douglas precinct.
- Bennington for Jefferson precinct.
- Elk City for Elkhorn precinct.
- In each of the school houses in McCauley and Union precincts. In each of the school houses in school precincts Nos. 21, 38 and 46.
- The work of the organization is in charge of the following persons: Douglas County—William M. Burton. Valley Precinct—R. E. Sager. Waterloo Precinct—J. H. Lionberger. Chicago Precinct—William A. Schall. Millard Precinct—Herbert J. Connell. Douglas Precinct—M. O. Cunningham. Bennington Precinct—Herman Timme. Elk City Precinct—T. A. Hollister. McCauley Precinct—Charles Bigutter. Union Precinct—H. L. Tucker. School Districts Nos. 21, 38 and 46—Robert M. Switzer.

Rain General Over Whole State Great Help to Spring Crops

The rain last night was general over the eastern part of Nebraska, according to the Burlington railroad report. It varied from one-tenth to one-half inch and Ravenna reported an inch of rainfall.

Schuyler, Fremont, Seward and Aurora reported one-fourth inch. Columbus had one-half inch. Lincoln reported a shower.

"The rain will be of great help to the crops, especially to spring wheat and corn," says the report. "It will not be of much help to winter wheat which is too near maturity to be benefited by rain."

The Burlington at present estimates Nebraska's wheat crop at only 70 per cent.

Tell Different Story to Different Judge is Charge

Lillian Clay, negro, wife of John Clay, Winnebago Indian, was held on $500 bonds for selling liquor to Indians, at a preliminary hearing before United States Judge Neely Tuesday morning.

Willie Free and Peter Whitegull, Indians, testified that they bought two pints of liquor from her for $11. Lillian denied their story and declared that the Indians had told a different story before Police Judge Fitzgerald in South Omaha last week.

"They are trying to shield someone else, your honor, by placing the blame on me," she insisted.

Testimony of the same Indians recently caused Sam Sing, Chinaman, to be held to the grand jury on $1,000 bonds. The men said that Sam sold them a pop bottle full of liquor for $2.50.

Peter Whitegull is himself under federal indictment for bringing liquor from Sioux City, Ia., to the Winnebago reservation.

Enforce Ruling Against Parcel Shipments Abroad

The Omaha postoffice has received notice from the War department in Washington that the ruling against general shipments of packages for overseas delivery must be rigidly enforced.

Daily scores of persons bring packages which they wish to send to soldiers in France to the local postoffice and the officials must refuse them.

The official notice from Washington says: "Every effort is being made by the War department to reduce the quantity of unnecessary parcels sent to American soldiers in France. This applies to Red Cross and Y. M. C. A. workers as well as soldiers or workmen connected with the American expeditionary force in France."

The only exception to this rule is when the package sent is accompanied with a request from the soldier which has been approved by a major or higher officer.

"Dreamland Adventures"

By Daddy—"War of the Frogs." A complete, new adventure each week, beginning Monday and ending Saturday.

CHAPTER II. General Hopper is Captured.

General Hopper and his Frog army, having declared war on the Snakes, ask the help of Peggy, who in a previous adventure has been crowned Princess of Birdland. Peggy, made tiny through a blade of grass from a fairy ring, goes to war mounted on the back of Mr. Swallow, who acts as her flying horse.

PEGGY flew back to Frog Island and found General Hopper on a high rock where he could view his entire forces.

"With this wonderful army I can conquer the earth," he boasted loudly as Peggy alighted beside him.

"It is fine," agreed Peggy, "but have you seen the Snake army?"

"No, but I'm sure it can't compare with mine. Just wait and see how they run when we come hopping and croaking at them."

"If they run I'm afraid they'll run toward you. What will you do then?" Peggy asked.

"Why, we'll pound them and pound them!" creaked General Hopper confidently. "And when they see how strong we are they'll surely streak it."

"You have to pound a snake awful hard to kill it," declared Peggy, remembering her own experience in fighting the Rattlesnake when she saved the Giant of the Woods. "I don't think you'll be able to pound hard enough."

"We'll not have to pound very hard," replied the general. "They'll go scooting as soon as they see our numbers."

"Numbers don't count unless they have a punch in them. That's what my father says of the Russians. You haven't any weapons that will really hurt the Snakes, while they have strong bodies, deadly fangs and killing poisons. They'll crush you and eat you."

"Supposing they do kill a lot of us," argued General Hopper, "while they are eating those that fall we will have them at our mercy."

"Would you like to be one of those killed?"

"No-o!" replied the general doubtfully. "And I don't propose to be. I'll be up in the air on the back of my flying horse."

"You can't possibly win by force. You'll have to use strategy," insisted Peggy.

"What's that?" asked the general. "Fooling 'em," replied Peggy.

"I'd rather fight 'em," insisted General Hopper. "There's more glory in winning that way."

Peggy saw that there was no use arguing with him. He was so puffed up over the size of his army that he wouldn't listen to common sense.

"What is your plan of attack?" she asked. The general hesitated.

"Oh, I haven't any regular plan," he answered at last. "We'll just pitch into 'em and lick 'em."

Peggy was getting more and more disgusted over his stupidity. She wondered how he had been made leader of the Frogs. She decided it must have been because he looked like an officer. It was foolish of the Frogs to elect him, but foolish or not, she had to do something to save them, for she felt that when they marched against the Snakes they would be marching to sure destruction.

"We must have a plan," she declared, "and try to make our losses as small as possible."

She guided Mr. Swallow back to the edge of the ravine. Rattler Glen, as Mr. Swallow called it, General Hopper reluctantly followed. He would much rather have stayed and posed before his army, but Blue Jay, acting as his flying horse, carried him off before he knew what was going on.

"If we could roll stones down on the Snakes we might be able to kill a lot," figured Peggy, looking up at the steep, rocky walls of the glen.

"We don't have to do that," insisted General Hopper. "We'll just come swimming across in vast numbers, climb up here by the easy slopes rising from Marshland, shout our battle cry, 'Cro-a-k 'em. Cro-a-k 'em! Cro-a-k 'em!' and those Snakes will just streak it. Won't it be fun?"

Many Birds were now coming to greet Peggy. They included Bob Olink, Reddy Woodpecker, Judge Owl, Homer and Carrie Pigeon, Blue Heron, King Fisher and a lot of others. Judge Owl frowned on General Hopper and hooted:

You can hop, hop, hop. But your top, top, top. Has no wit, wit, wit. Not a bit, bit, bit.

Bob Olink explained the matter to Peggy: "The Frogs have gone to war in a good cause—the freedom of Marshland," he said. "And we Birds want them to win, for the Snakes are our enemies, too. But the Frogs don't know how to fight. That's why we sent for you."

"I can fight," blustered General Hopper. "Show me any Snake I can't whip." With that he leaped from the back of Blue Jay and strutted up and down, swelling out his chest.

Peggy saw a stir in the grass behind General Hopper. As he uttered his boast a head arose—the glistening head of a Blacksnake. The Birds scattered instantly.

General Hopper, warned by the flight of the Birds, glanced around and saw the enemy. His jaw dropped, his boastfulness vanished, his legs shook. He tried to leap, but caught his foot in the grass and fell. In a second the Blacksnake had pounced upon him and in another instant General Hopper was disappearing down the Snake's throat.

"Quick! Rescue him!" cried Peggy. But the Birds only fluttered farther away. "Isn't there any one of you brave enough to save him?"

At that King Fisher darted down like a flash. He seized the Blacksnake by the tail and struggled upward again. The astonished Blacksnake opened wide his mouth and General Hopper fell out. The Blacksnake writhed up toward King Fisher but the bird, carrying him over the edge of the cliff, dropped him. The Snake fell squirming to the rocks far below.

General Hopper didn't wait to see this. The instant he found himself free he took a mighty leap from the edge of the cliff and dived well out into the river. Then he swam frantically under water for Frog Island.

"Hurrah!" cried Peggy, as she saw the Blacksnake drop over the cliff. "Now I know how we'll conquer the Snake army, but we'll need the Giant of the Woods to help us."

And away Mr. Swallow flew for the Giant's castle.

(In the next chapter Peggy visits the Giant and meets Billy Belgium for the first time.)

"I HAVE been using Doctor Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin for more than seven years. I believe it saved my little granddaughter's life, as she had such terrible spasms, caused by the condition of her stomach, until we gave her Syrup Pepsin. Our family thinks there is no remedy like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin for the stomach and bowels."
