

HIDE CLOTHES TO KEEP SAMMIES IN HOSPITALS

Returning Convalescents Now About Balance List of Wounded Soldiers.

Washington, July 5.—The list of casualties from the American army fighting in France is now being balanced by returning convalescents, whose numbers in the reconstruction centers like Walter Reed hospital here have reached an appreciable total.

It is an outstanding fact to all observers that an American youth smashed by a shell, bomb or hand grenade is, notwithstanding, exactly the same kind of an individual he was before he went in. High spirited, mischievous, all personal loss discounted and humanly anxious to resume any dull round of civilian labor, they have a tendency to regard the carefully planned hospital school for re-educating them to usefulness with the same distaste that healthy youth has for the training establishments, however desirable he may know them to be.

So a chance visitor to the hospital expecting to discover a hero is apt to find a proportion of youths whose clothes have been taken away from them to compel them to stay near their beds. They are likely to be calculating intelligently their chances to shirk irksome routine. Whatever adventure and torture they have lived is forgotten while their force and energy are entirely devoted to the problem of today.

Vigor Astounding.

"Yes, they are most healthy and normal beings, undepressed and entirely untroubled about anything," explained Major Cotton, one of the chiefs of orthopedic surgery at Walter Reed. "We find these are not ill people. Their mental and physical vigor is astonishing to persons not familiar with the circumstances."

It is requiring a continuation of military discipline and considerable patience and persistence to work out on this material, the far-sighted plans for teaching a maimed man a new and productive trade. The massage, hydrotherapy, and electric treatment to restore wasted muscle and shrunken limb are regarded as splendid, but the schools are dodged most gladly. Still, the men are weaving baskets, and demonstrating intelligent interest in automobile mechanics, and other wise submitting to requirements which are made before they can have liberty or any leisure.

"See a German?" responded Maurice Becker, once a private in the 16th infantry. "You bet I saw a German. Three of them, all at once, one night, patrolling in front of our post. They got my buddy with a rifle bullet, and I was cutting loose with my automatic and hand grenades. We got two, and one of my own grenades got me."

Afraid of Grenades.

Becker explained the suspicion he had about hand grenades, which is shared by all soldiers in their first meeting with that deadly weapon. "Yah, they tell you it is timed for five seconds," he announced scornfully, "and then one goes off in three seconds, and the next goes off in seven so Fritz can dump it back on you."

They are going to try and teach Becker to be an automobile expert before they send him back home to Mishawaka, Ind.

Sergt. Paul Chamberlain, 22 years old and with six years' military service behind him, had a new theory.

"I'm a military failure," he announced, after it was explained that a shrapnel shell had taken away a good section of one foot. "A fellow with my experience could have stepped right along, promotion and all, but Fritz picked me off too quick. Nothing heroic about it; we'd been in 20 days in trench at Toul, and were going out at dawn on March 9 when they tagged me. There's a bunch of scrap iron in these Dutch shells, and it got me."

"Still, maybe I'll be an instructor or something with the army yet awhile. Down here, I'm studying poultry raising."

One soldier, a mimic, broke up the discussion by re-enacting the scenes in the base hospital wards, when English visitors demanded incessantly, "My word, are you really a Yank?"

Thus, the one grimness about Walter Reed hospital, where 1,100 patients now are housed in the headquarters map which often adds many red lines on a blueprint to show extensions building, and more yellow lines to show extensions planned. It does not extend to the wounded who are back from "over there."

They won't let it while they have a joke left.

Spanish Influenza Sweeps Over Many of Large German Towns

Amsterdam, July 5.—German newspapers report the rapid spread of Spanish influenza in Bremen, Hamburg and other cities. The Frankfurter Zeitung says some factories in Frankfurt have from one-third to one-half their workers absent because of the disease.

The resignation of Dr. Richard von Kuehlmann is said by the Rheinische Westfaelische Zeitung of Essen to be virtually certain.

Rumors the revived that Germany is considering an attempt to reach an agreement to confine air raiding to towns within the zone of operations. Vienna dispatches hint the former Premier Czernin is again coming to the front. He had a long audience with Emperor Charles, after which he conferred with the premier, Baron Burian.

Armenian Force Occupies Big City in Transcaucasia

Amsterdam, July 5.—Armenian forces on the aggressive in Transcaucasia have established themselves well within the former Russian territory, according to reports from Kiev. The latest advices from this source, quoted by the Berlin Lokal Anzeiger, state that an Armenian force 25,000 strong has occupied the city of Erivan, 115 miles south of Tiflis and nearly 50 miles inside the transcaucasian border.
