Fortunate Omahans Are Spending the Summer in Shade of Capitol Dome

The hub of the universe is now Washington, D. C., and in the shadow of the capitol's dome interesting folk from all corners of the world are gathered. Fortunate indeed are the chosen few who are guests in the city on the Potomac, on which the eyes of the world are turned.

Miss Helen Nason is a fortunate Omahans who is spending the summer with Col. and Mrs. James Allin in Washington. As a guest of a prominent member of the army set Miss Nason has been honored at numbers of delightful affairs. The Fourth was a day long to be remembered in the capital and President Wilson's speech at Mount Vernon will go down in history. Miss Nason had the privilege of hearing the president at this historic spot, where the first standard bearer of democracy lived and died.

Miss Nason gives a vivid description in her letters of the huge suffrage meeting held at the White House. She was one who stood in line for two hours and was unable to gain admittance owing to the huge crowd of ardent enthusiasts for "equal rights" who stormed the grounds.

Lovely motor trips about the suburbs are included in the pleasures of the summer visitor in Washington and the beautiful parks are a never ending source of delight.

Mrs. Allin and Miss Nason are girlhood friends, as Mrs. Allin was formerly Miss Jessie Pontius of this city. She and Miss Nason, had the unique experience of teaching in the public schools at Panama for two years. Mrs. Allin has visited in Omaha many times and is well known here.

"Dreamland Adventures"

By Daddy—The Beautiful Stranger

CHAPTER IV.
Captured by the Bandits.

(Previous chapters have told of the love of the King of the Wild Geese for the Beautiful Stranger, and of how, with Peggy and his army, he goes in search of her, hoping to find her before she becomes the unwilling bride of the leader of the Blue Geese.)

EASTWARD flew the King of the Wild Geese and his flock until Peggy, looking down from her airplane, saw a large body of water ahead of them.

"Why, there's a big lake," she cried.

Father Blackfoot, who was flying just ahead of her, gave a chuckling honk.

"That's not a lake," he said, "That's old Daddy Ocean himself."

"Gracious me," exclaimed Peggy. "Have we come so far?"

"There's Labrador below," replied Father Blackfoot.

"Now I shall find my beloved," honked the King happily.

"The Lake of Good Hunting is large," warned Father Blackfoot. "It has many wildernesses where the bandit Geese could hide. There it lies ahead of us to the north."

The region was wild and desolate looking, with rocky, shrubby-covered wastes surrounding the lake.

Presently a great field of white appeared.

"Snow!" cried Peggy. "We're up in Santa Claus land."

"We are near there," agreed the King. "Perhaps we will find tracks in the snow. I can never forget the dainty print of the foot of my beloved."

With that the King darted downward toward the white field, with Peggy following close.

"My, it will be fun to play in the snow in June," said Peggy, bringing the airplane down upon a dazzling bank of white.

Instantly she found herself in the midst of a wild turmoil. The white surface of the ground rose up as if shaken by a tremendous earthquake. She felt herself born upward and tumbled about. A loud roar filled her ears. She was buffeted and beaten on all sides. Strange heads appeared about her. It seemed as if the snow were carrying her away. Peggy remembered how she had carelessly trampled the white carpet in winter time. The thought flashed into her mind that perhaps the snow was really alive and now that she was in its home, it was having its revenge upon her!

And it was alive. But not in the way Peggy thought. In a minute when the confusion cleared away she found that she was flying along in the midst of a great flock of white Geese. She found, too, that they were as desperately scared as she was, and were streaking it as fast as they could fly. Presently she heard the King of the Wild Geese calling to them. His voice seemed to quiet them, but it was some moments before they halted on their mad flight and settled down on the surface of the lake. The King of the Wild Geese apologized for disturbing their sleep—for that was what they were doing, all huddled up together, when Peggy and the King thought they were a snow field.

Soon they were all laughing over their scare.

"You looked just like snow," exclaimed Peggy to the leader of the White Geese.

"No wonder," he replied. "We are Snow Geese."

The Snow Geese and the Canada Geese were good friends of long standing, so the leader readily answered the questions of the King about the Blue Geese.
