Mellificia Inspires Verse.
Heading the society column one day last week was an account of the dilemma of a prominent Omaha family, the head of which was forced to purchase a Ford car for use of the family servants in order to retain them in his household. The story inspired Mrs. J. M. Johnson, 123 North Thirty-third street, to pen these lines: Katie the cook, and Nora the maid, And Annie the nurse, at a suburban home staid; From the city 'twas far, On a line of no car To help their perplexity of their mistress sought aid.

Katie the cook, and Nora the maid, And Annie the nurse, all said, "Sure indeed, If she won't provide In which we can ride, A car, our places with others we'll trade" Katie the cook and Nora the maid, And Annie the nurse, feel they are repaid For a "Lizalis of no car" they now ride within, From country to city they're quickly conveyed.
