Stockmen in the west and southwest have been very much exercised regarding the outlook for financing their operations during the coming season.

The managers of the Federal Reserve banks at several of the western reserve districts also took the matter up and at the request of the different exchanges the National Live Stock Exchange last week sent a strong letter to the authorities at Washington.

"Dreamland Adventures" By DADDY—The Five Tramps

(In a previous adventure Peggy has helped secure the freedom of Lonesome Bear from his master, whom he has heroically saved.)

CHAPTER I. Captured by Tramps.

"SEE the bear! See the funny dancing bear!"

Down the street from Peggy's home the children were gathering in an excited crowd.

Peggy who had been taking an afternoon nap in the hammock, ran to see the fun.

"A bear! I wonder if he is as good a dancer as Lonesome Bear," she said to herself.

"And I wonder if he loves the free forest and hates the hard city pavements as much as Lonesome Bear did before we helped him gain his liberty."

The children were shrieking with laughter and applauding the odd antics of the bear. Peggy could see he was a skillful performer.

"How much he looks like Lonesome Bear," she thought. "Perhaps this is the brother he lost when he was a youngster."

Just then the bear waltzed around so that he faced Peggy. Instantly his dance stopped and he held out imploring paws to her.

"Save me, Princess Peggy," he moaned. "I'm in worse slavery than ever."

It was Lonesome Bear himself. He had been captured again. Peggy indignantly looked at his master.

It wasn't Pete his former owner. This was a rough, ragged, unkempt fellow, who in some way seemed strangely familiar to her. He turned around, showing as he did so a great hole torn in the tail of his coat. Then Peggy recognized him. He was the tramp who had interrupted the wedding of General Swallow to Miss Purple Swallow. The hole was the one made when Johnny Bull grabbed him and chased him into the woods.

The tramp prodded him cruelly with his stick, doubling him up.

"Dance some more," he said to her, "with an evil smile. 'I'll give you a nickel.'"

Peggy shrank away from him. It would be horrible to have to obey such a dirty creature as he was. She pitied Lonesome Bear with all her heart.

"The tramp came close to her. "Dance, I tell you," he hissed. "I'll give you money if you do, and I'll cut your ears off if you don't."

He scowled so horribly that Peggy gave a little cry of fear and pressed back into the crowd. Lonesome Bear growled at the tramp and showed his teeth.

The tramp prodded him cruelly with his stick, doubling him up.

"I was wonderfully happy in the free woods," he sighed. "I found so many berries and grubs that I was growing fat while I had a lot of fun dancing for the Birds. My only fear was from a gang of tramps who had a camp by the river. That I had cause for this fear is shown by the fact that one hot night when I carelessly napped beneath a tree they pounced upon me and made me a prisoner."

"This fellow here is Tags, the leader of the tramps. He knew I was a dancing bear, because he had seen me frolicking with the Birds. So he brings me here to town every day, and I am unhappy than ever because I have tasted happiness and lost it."

"Poor Lonesome Bear, this tramp has no business living off your mis-cry," cried Peggy. "I'll try to find some way of rescuing you."

There was a big burst of applause as the dance ended, and Peggy, to her embarrassment, found that a large share of it was for her. Every one was eager to throw their pennies into the hat which Tags passed around, and the tramp was shrewd enough to see that Peggy was a real drawing card.

"Dance some more," he said to her, "with an evil smile. 'I'll give you a nickel.'"

GRANGE CHURCH DESECRATED AND FLAG TORN DOWN

Officers of the Law Take Case In Hand and Propose to Hunt Down Parties to Outrage.

The Grange church in Boomer township, 14 miles north of Council Bluffs, has been broken open, its altar violated and a big American flag taken down and desecrated.

The Grange church is undenominational and is used by many religious organizations. It is a handsome little building on a picturesque site and is as modern as such a building can be. The congregation is intensely patriotic and a service flag on which there are 25 stars occupies a place on the wall by the side of Old Glory.

Flag Torn Down. The church was violated last Sunday night, a week ago. The building was opened during the afternoon for the funeral of Mrs. Killpack, mother of W. H. Killpack, Council Bluffs.

The clergyman, standing at the altar with flags at his back, could not avoid making a patriotic address as he extolled the character of Mrs. Killpack.
