My Hat Diary

My Hat Diary BY—Carita Herzog

I think it's dreadfully early for fall hats, but as sure as my name is Carita Herzog, I saw one. Oh, it was wonderful, and such a stunning woman wore it. I'll tell you how it came about. Dick Ritter invited me to go to the Country club for dinner last evening. Well, mother said she didn't care just so I would be back in time to help her serve. (She was giving a little bridge party). So Dick called for me at about 6:30 and we drove out in his car. On our way we met a car that had a puncture. A lady was in it and, of course, she was helpless, so Dick offered to help her. She was the lady that wore that fall hat. It was black velvet faced with white satin. The brim turned up severely in the front, and on the right side. The crown was very high and stiff. A huge bunch of black aigrettes came directly out at the left side from the back of the crown and extended out about six inches from the hat. After Dick fixed the puncture the lady thanked him cordially and we went on out to the club.

Dreamland Adventures

By Daddy—"OLD KING CROW"

A Complete, New Adventure Each Week, Beginning Monday and Ending Saturday

CHAPTER II. The Spy in the Dark. BROWNIE OWL led his forces to a section of the forest a little apart from the rookery where the Crows lived. It was still light above the treetops, but down below in the woods the shadows were already deep. The hush of twilight was in the air. The day birds had said their last good night and not a peep came from them. Even the wind was still. In its quietness the forest seemed very mysterious and awesome to Peggy.

"It's getting awfully dark," she said nervously to Brownie Owl. "Yes, I can see better every minute," he answered. "Soon we can attack." "What will we do when we do attack?" asked Peggy, still mindful of the overwhelming number of Crows and the comparatively small fighting force of Brownie Owl.

"Oh, we'll make a lot of noise, slash into the Crows with all our might and drive them scotching out of this part of the country," boasted Brownie Owl. "That doesn't sound like a good plan," mused Peggy. "You may be able to give them an awful scare, but even if you do scatter them galley west, they can't fly far in the dark, and you'll find them all back here again in the morning."

Brownie Owl thought over this angle of the matter for a moment. "I agree with you," he finally nodded. "But even if we can't get rid of them for good, we can give them a fright they'll remember." "But that fright will not save the corn crop," argued Peggy. "We must find some way that will force the Crows to go away or else be good. Why can't we capture old King Crow and hold him as a hostage? they wouldn't dare he had if we had him where we could slash off his head as the penalty."

"You're right! You're always right!" exclaimed Brownie Owl enthusiastically. "We'll wall him up, just as he walled me up. My, won't I have a good time making faces at him—that is, if I dare go near him!" Brownie Owl hesitated in a way that made Peggy suspicious. "If you dare go near him," she repeated questioningly. "Why is he so much worse than other Crows?" "He is an ogre and a magician," hooted Brownie Owl solemnly. "They say he charms every bird that dares to look him in the eye. When he has charmed them he makes them dance themselves to death to amuse him and then eats them up."

"Gracious!" said Peggy. "Why didn't you tell me this before?" "Because you didn't ask me," replied Brownie Owl. "You're right! You're always right!" exclaimed Brownie Owl enthusiastically. "We'll wall him up, just as he walled me up. My, won't I have a good time making faces at him—that is, if I dare go near him!" Brownie Owl hesitated in a way that made Peggy suspicious. "If you dare go near him," she repeated questioningly. "Why is he so much worse than other Crows?" "He is an ogre and a magician," hooted Brownie Owl solemnly. "They say he charms every bird that dares to look him in the eye. When he has charmed them he makes them dance themselves to death to amuse him and then eats them up."

SOCIETY

VISIONS of black cats and all manner of bad luck signs may fill your mind when we say Friday the 13th, but members of the Seymour Lake Country club are planning one of the largest affairs of the year on that ill-fated night. This will be a birthday dinner and the tables will be named for the months of the year, the guests finding their places by the date of their birthdays. Of course, each table will be decorated in accordance with the month, tiny May baskets will no doubt adorn the May table, while ears of corn and autumn leaves will mark the fall months.

A misfit party is planned for Friday the 20th at the club and the guests will be dressed in their worst instead of their best. Old clothes will be the rule and the refreshments will be baked beans and brown bread, served on tin plates.

The dancers will one-step under bowers of corn stalks, wild grape vines and autumn leaves Friday evening, September 27, for it will be the Harvest Home dance and the formal closing of the club. Under ghostly lanterns the members will have their last dinner together after a summer of innumerable good times at this attractive club.

vanished into the thickness of the woods. Peggy was startled. "It was only a bat!" hooted Brownie Owl nervously. "Only a bat, but that bat may be a spy for the Crows," exclaimed Peggy. "Come, we must attack quickly." Her aerial chariot rose into the air and moved in the midst of the Night Birds toward the camp of the Crows. As was proved later, her fear that the bat might be a spy was only too well founded. (Tomorrow will be described the attack in the dark, and the unexpected consequences.)
