ALLIED CHIEFS ENFORCE ORDER IN ARCHANGEL

City Put Under Protectorate Pending Adjustment of Disputes; U. S. Soldiers Patrol Streets.

Archangel, Wednesday, Sept. 11.—Colonel Tchaplina, leader of the recent attempt to overturn the provisional government headed by M. Tschaikevsky in northwestern Russia, has resigned his post as commander of the Russian forces and has been succeeded by Colonel Ivanoff.

The labor disputes in Archangel are being rapidly settled. American soldiers who had been operating the street car system have been transferred to other duties.

As a result of an attempt to overthrow the Tschaikevsky government the allied diplomatic and military chiefs today assumed temporary direction and established a protectorate in the region in the rear of the allied front pending the adjustment of the political disputes. This decision followed the arrest of M. Tschaikevsky and all but two members of his government early Thursday by a party of conservative officers headed by Colonel Tchaplina, the Russian army commander, who sought to establish a new regime.

M. Tschaikevsky and his ministers were taken on board a ship en route to the Solovetski monastery, from where they were returned by the approval of Consul General Poole. Meanwhile the allied forces, including the American troops, are patrolling the city, assuring tranquility and a just settlement of all disputes.

Allied Proclamation.
Following is the text of the proclamation, which is signed by the American, French, British and Italian ambassadors and Consul General Poole:

"To the people of the northern region: The undersigned representatives of the allied nations and the commanders-in-chief of their forces, deplorable as the calamity threatening the northern region with a widespread famine for the relief of which we are bringing supplies from our country. We have no intention or desire to force upon the northern region any kind of government or any officials not the choice of the majority of the people.

"Until the arrested ministers, who are now on their way back under the protection of the allies, return to Archangel and until popular opinion can show who should continue to exercise the power in a constituted government we will assure the absolute maintenance of order, and will assure that the sovereign rights of every one will be respected and observed and that the daily life of the community will not be interrupted. Consequently, subject to our approval the assistants heads of the ministries and chief of bureaus will continue to perform their duties. We trust that all good citizens will co-operate in the furthering of this well-meaning plan. The necessity for which should appeal to every patriotic Russian who wants national independence and a regime of democratic liberty."

Enjoin New Government.
The allied ambassadors had absolutely no desire to interfere in internal affairs, but they considered that the Tchaplina party's attempt to establish by stealth and force to be incompatible with the principles for which the allies are fighting. As soon as he learned Thursday morning of the coup d'etat, American Ambassador Francis called a conference of the diplomats and Consul-General Poole with the result that the new government was prohibited from functioning and the Tschaikevsky ministers were ordered immediately returned pending an adjustment and the proclamation prepared. Meanwhile, however, proclamations by Tchaplina and Ivanoff and Dedusenko, who were not arrested, and the Tschaikevsky ministers appeared in the streets.

These several proclamations so confused the people that a second allied decision became necessary. Working men and operatives before the allied decision became known called strikes, which are being adjusted. The Tchaplina group contends that it was not fairly represented in the government. The proclamation by Dedusenko charged that Tchaplina was attempting to restore a monarchy headed by Grand Duke Michael Alexandrovich, brother of the late emperor, who, they contend, is hiding in Archangel. Of this there is no proof.

Archangel is generally tranquil and the people are watching the American and other guards, apparently satisfied with the fairness of the allies.

An Associated Press dispatch from Archangel September 22 said that the Tschaikevsky provisional government had been reelected after a conference between the entente allied diplomatic and military chiefs and that it would continue to direct the affairs in the region of the north with the advice of the allies.

Arthur J. He also declared that no coalition ever has been so strong as the allied coalition and that the enemy would not succeed in breaking it.

An example of supreme love and everlasting devotion to one's country is found in the sacrifice of Urban Chandeur and his wife, Louise. The aged couple, after purchasing annuity in a French hospital in San Francisco, sent the remainder of their savings, about $2,000, to the French consul-general at San Francisco.

The couple are 96 and 95 years old, respectively. They were recently visited and personally thanked by General Pau upon his visit to San Francisco.

(In previous adventures Peggy has become Princess of Birdland and has met a number of interesting bird characters.)

CHAPTER I

Peggy Meets a Pacifist.

"Oh! Cool! I'm hungry. Throw me some crumbs!"

Peggy looked up from the newspaper she was reading. On the porch railing before her was perched a fat Pigeon.

"We haven't any crumbs. We belong to the patriotic food savers," she answered.

"What's that—a new excuse for being stingy?" The Pigeon's saucy answer caused Peggy's eyes to flash with indignation.

"Stingy, indeed!" she retorted. "We are generous to our soldiers and to our allies when we guard every bit of food, so that they will have all the more."

"But what are we Pigeons going to do if you don't feed us?"

Peggy thought over that angle of the matter for a moment. Then, like a true Yankee, she answered by asking another question.

"Why don't you feed yourselves?"

"How silly. We do feed ourselves. We pick up the crumbs that people throw to us."

"Nonsense," tartly replied Peggy, who was annoyed by the Pigeon's puffed-up ways. "I mean, why aren't you self-sufficient? Why don't you earn your own food by eating food-destroying insects or picking up weed seeds?"

"The idea. Who ever heard of such a thing?" The Pigeon drew itself up haughtily and fluffed out its feathers.

"Homer and Carrie Pigeon find plenty to eat and are serving the country by gobbling up crop-raiding pests on Farmer Dalton's farm," answered Peggy, warmly.

"Oh, they are common country Pigeons," sneered the Pigeon. "They work for a living."

"And who are you that you are above work?" demanded Peggy.

"Why, I'm Airy Pointer of the Steeple Pigeons. We trace our ancestry back to the original Blue Rocks. We haven't worked in years and years."

"How do you live, then?" asked Peggy.

"We live in a steeple, as befits Birds of our quality. And we eat only the best of food, too—cake crumbs and bits of bread, which people who are not stingy—Airy Pointer looked disdainfully at Peggy.

"I am glad to give you for the pleasure our appearance gives them."

"Well, you are pretty," admitted Peggy. "And I used to think it was nice to feed you crumbs and wheat. But that was before the war. Now we have to use our food for useful purposes. We can't throw any of it away just for fun or to feed lazy ornaments." She gave Airy Pointer just as disdainful a look as he had given her. "If you were patriotic you'd help win the war by helping in the food raising, as the other Birds are doing."

"I don't like war. I'm a pacifist."

"Humph," said Peggy, disgustedly. "Neither do I like war, and neither does any real American, but we don't like to be robbed and insulted and murdered. We're fighting because we love peace enough to fight for it. And you don't love peace even enough to do your share in saving food. You're a fine pacifist!"

"You are a very disagreeable person, and I'll tell all of the tribe in our steeple to have nothing to do with you, cried Airy Pointer, as he fluttered stiffly away before she could say another word.

Peggy was much annoyed by Airy Pointer's attitude. She was so thoroughly loyal herself that she didn't have much patience with either food slackers or work slackers.

"Cool, cool!" came another Pigeon call, and Peggy looked up prepared for further argument. But her frown quickly turned into a smile. On the porch railing were Homer and Carrie Pigeon, and between them, seated in a little chair which was harnessed to them, was Billy Belgium shrunk to the size of a doll.

"Hello, Princess Peggy," cried Billy Belgium. "We're on war work. Do you want to come along?"

"Sure I do," answered Peggy.

"What is it?"

"We are raising an army of Pigeons to carry messages for the Americans in France. We've recruited a lot of the country Pigeons and now we've come after the city Pigeons."

"You have a job on your hands making useful messengers of those stiff-necked Steeple Pigeons," answered Peggy. "But you bet if they don't enlist, I'll give them a piece of my mind. Have you any fairy grass to make me small?"

"Here it is," answered Billy, pulling a blade from beneath his chair. Peggy nibbled on it, and in a trice she was as small as he.

"There's room in this seat," said Billy, moving over. "Crowd in."

Peggy did as he said, and the Pigeons rose into the air, floating toward the high church steeple that towered above the housetops a block away.

"Tomorrow will be told the reception Peggy and Billy Belgium get from the Steeple Pigeons and about the arrival of the Bird Strangers."

Believes New World Is In the Making.

LOUIS F. POST

A new world is now in the making, Louis F. Post, assistant secretary of labor of the United States, who is at present in San Francisco on official business, believes this. A new world with no quarter for the monopolist; no allowance for the private ownership of public resources; no toleration for class oppression—a new world with the people in control. The successful prosecution of the war means the realization of this vision. It means a state of democracy such as the world has not yet seen. Co-operation, not domination, must be the keynote of the new order.

Error Might Give Idea Clothes Had Taken Slump

A most evident mistake was made by the printer in the large advertisement for Hayden Bros., in Sunday's Bee. The announcement was made to read "The Omaha Home of Hart Schaffner & Marx, All-wool Guaranteed Clothes. Most complete line west of Chicago, 25 cents up." The ad should have read "$25 up."

HENRY P. DAVISON

Henry P. Davison, chairman of the war council of the American Red Cross, is on his way to France, according to an announcement made by the Red Cross in New York. This is Mr. Davison's second trip to Europe this year. It is his purpose to meet the heads of the American Red Cross abroad to discuss the increasing requirements of the expeditionary forces.
