

AMERICAN BOYS TAKE WIRELESS WORK IN FRANCE

Handling Greatest Sending Station in World and in Touch With United States.

Tours, Central France, Sept. 27.—(Correspondence of the Associated Press.)—The American army will soon be sharing with the French in the operation of the highest and most powerful wireless sending station in the world. This is now nearing completion on the French coast—the point cannot be stated—and its giant towers can be seen rising 810 feet, or 300 feet higher than the Eiffel tower. Soon it will be in direct touch with America with far more power than ever before, supplementing the cable for trans-Atlantic service, and perhaps with its new power rivaling the cable for quick communication.

All along the front small wireless stations have been set up to intercept enemy radio exchanges and locate enemy stations. Messages are picked up from all the capitals of Europe, and especially from the larger German cities. This practice of intercepting messages seems to be universally accepted as a war necessity, and the crop daily gathered includes those from friends as well as foe. The enemy has small radio stations along the front, which are in constant communication with Berlin and Hanover, the two central enemy stations.

In Control of Cable. The American army controls a quadruple cable line across the English channel, which connects the French telegraph and telephone system directly with the English lines. Thus American officials are brought together for direct immediate exchange between Paris, London and American headquarters at the front.

An extension to trans-Atlantic cable is only a question of time, and with this realized there is the possibility at least of direct immediate communication between Washington and American military headquarters at the front.

Weather forecasting and meteorological work is another branch which has become highly important in the American military operations. It has played its part not only in the determination of the moment for big offensive movements, when steady clear weather is one of the elements of success, but also in the extremely important special forecasts it furnishes the artillery branch, the air service, and the gas service.

Doing Weather Forecasting. The failure or success of a gas attack may turn on the foreknowledge of the wind and barometric conditions. It has been a coincidence that most of the German offensives have come during periods of favorable weather, and this has led to statements that they had developed some new and superior device of weather forecasting. But those who have most to do with the service say the allied forecasters are as expert as any the world over. Carrier pigeon service is still another branch of communication which the American army is finding highly advantageous in the field. The pigeoners, as they are called, have become an important adjunct of the front, with several hundred enlisted men and a score of officers, equipped with rolling lofts, breeding stations, etc. Some of the leading pigeon fanciers have been commissioned in this branch, and they are breeding birds of the finest stock. Captured enemy pigeons show that the Germans are also using very fine birds and are placing much dependence on the carrier service.

There is the motorcycle dispatch service as an adjunct to the telegraph, for carrying maps and long documents too bulky for the wires, and the photographic branch with a unit for each division, keeping a complete pictorial record of the American military activities. Although it is a huge work with some 3 to 4 per cent of the entire army—or about 35,000 officers and men in a force of 1,000,000 men—maintaining the steady flow of communication throughout this nerve system of the American army.

Low-Flying Airplanes Harry German Forces as They Move Along

Somewhere in France, Sept. 26.—The progressively increasing effectiveness of the allied airplane service was one of the allied demonstrations to American soldiers in recent operations on the western front. The harrying of German cavalry, marching infantry and transport by low flying airplanes, as undertaken last spring, was the first example of a really large scale counter-offensive from the air.

The technique of this new departure has since developed rapidly, and it is now a deliberate method of air fighting. Machines fly audaciously low until their ammunition is exhausted, so low that pilots have identified the regimental insignia of the troops attacked, and that the crews of the airplanes have been known to skim the earth. Day and night, the bombing of railroads, aerodromes, camps and dumps goes on with its simultaneous effect upon supply, communication, and morale, and far behind the lines the sources of supply on the Rhine are being persistently devastated.

Hungarian Land Owners Would Work Prisoners

Zurich Sept. 26.—Hungarian landowners are doing their utmost to keep back Russian prisoners of war. The Hungarian Agricultural union has sent a memorial to the government asserting that the disordered conditions of Russia render difficult the return of prisoners to their homes, and also that the withdrawal of 300,000 Russians from the farms would cause enormous loss to Hungarian agriculture.
