

Women's Work in War Time

Wealthy Indian Woman Ranch Owner Expert In Business

Mrs. Ed Lannigan, Descendant of Shoshoni Indians, at South Side Market to Look After Live Stock Interests.

After a successful summer on her "little" ranch of 800 acres, Mrs. Ed Lannigan, reputed to be the wealthiest woman in all the broad state of Wyoming, is in Omaha for a shopping tour.

Despite her cultured speech and charming manner one has visions of the council fires and gay wigwags of that race of redskins who were monarchs of the fields and forests when our land was young.

After her marriage to Mr. Lannigan she was introduced to ranch life and here she has made her home. Undaunted by her husband's death, she has managed the ranch herself, assisted by her three daughters, May, Cora and Clara Lannigan.

Mrs. Lannigan is loath to leave her beautiful home with its rolling acres, but plans to pass the winter in California with her two daughters, Misses Cora and Clara, who are now with her in Omaha.

Winning the war is very near to the hearts of the westerners, according to Mrs. Lannigan, the people who live on the different ranches meeting together for Red Cross work regularly, while the young girls plan all sorts of dances and parties for the benefit of the work.

Mrs. Lannigan spent this morning at the South Side stock yards with her ranch foreman making arrangements for the disposition of her cattle. With her business transactions closed, she will devote herself to that occupation dearest to all feminine hearts, shopping for smart fall clothes.

TIP-TOP BREAD

Though young in years, these future housewives of Omaha were visibly impressed with what they saw, and if their frank opinions, ejaculations of wonder and delight can be taken as a criterion, every one of these young ladies, when they come to manage their own household, will always buy no other bread but TIP-TOP.

Hundreds of others have visited our new bakery plant—the finest and best appointed plant in the country, and eat our bread because they know it is pure, clean and best.

Desserts Which the Food Administration Eats

It is always interesting to know how people live up to what they are preaching. The magazines for a time were filled with stories of the Hoovers' private life and especially of the foods served at their table.

Some time ago the newspapers stated that the cafeteria in the headquarters building of the United States food administration had served 6,000 meals with only 50 pounds of sugar. This would mean less than a teaspoonful for each meal.
