Six of the Enemy Put to Rout by Lone Omaha Man

It is not unusual for a khaki-clad Yank to charge a whole nest of German machine guns or to silence a battery single-handed, and bring his prisoner into camp at the point of a bayonet, but it is rather unusual to hear of such a feat being pulled off in the streets of an American city.

Such was the case Wednesday and right here in Omaha, except that it was not a German battery that was silenced.

James Wicker, a former employe at the U. P. headquarters, recently received his notification to report for service and was on his way to the train when he was accosted by a half dozen overgrown bullies at on a bond, was brought into police court the corner of Sixteenth and Jackson streets. At first young Wicker was amazed, but finding that his assailants were intent upon carrying out their intent he finally set down his grips and took them on.

The boys had not exactly figured out just the "exact amount of territhey had taken in, for altory though Wicker is only of slight build, he is thoroughly familiar with the proper methods of using his fists and witnesses to the scene say it was great sport to see how quickly he put his assailants to flight. All who say the sport say that Wicker will make a good soldier, and when the "cop" found out what had occurred, he merely shook Wicker's hand and wished him good

The rest of gang had beat it in sufficient time to make good their get-away. Young Wicker could give no reason for the attack and was inclined to believe the fellows had mistaken him for another party.
