

IMPLEMENT MEN IN A THREE-DAY SESSION HERE

Attendance Larger Than Ever Before; Machinery Exhibit Being Held in the Auditorium.

The tenth annual convention of the Midwest Implement Dealers' association opened its doors here Wednesday for a three-day session, November 13, 14 and 15. The convention sessions will be held in the convention hall in the Hotel Rome, while the exhibit of farm machinery, trucks and tractors will be at the Municipal Auditorium.

President C. E. Gallagher of Oelridge, Vice President O. A. Rystrom of Stromsburg, Secretary James Wallace of Council Bluffs, and Treasurer J. M. Elwell of Springfield, Neb., were all on the ground early Wednesday morning completing arrangements, while the membership committee was busy enrolling new members as they arrived.

Large Attendance Expected.
President Gallagher said that the indications are that the attendance at this session will exceed by far that of any previous convention. The exhibits in the Auditorium occupy the entire main floor and basement, displaying every conceivable kind of up-to-date farm machine. There is an unusual display of farm tractors and automobile trucks. One firm is exhibiting a combination tractor and harvester all capable of being operated by one man. The harvester cuts a 10-foot swath and one man can harvest 25 acres per day.

To Inspect Machinery Today.
Thursday morning at 9 o'clock the members will be addressed by F. R. Seibert of Eau Claire, Wis., and Will T. Graham of Omaha. At 2 o'clock p. m. today the dealers will inspect the exhibits in the Auditorium.

DREAMLAND ADVENTURE

By DADDY
"The Haunted School"

(The Birds play a joke on Peggy and Billy Belgium, blinding them and taking them to school. Billy declares the school is haunted and strange noises seem to confirm his words.)

CHAPTER IV.

At the Attic Window.
BILLY BELGIUM, as he heard the mysterious sounds overhead, looked surprised and dismayed. Was this ghost joke coming back at him like the one told by Judge Owl?

"One of the Birds is trying to fool us," he whispered, but Peggy could see that he wasn't at all certain that this guess was true. "Birds don't cry like that," said Peggy.

"Cat Birds do and so do Mocking Birds," declared Billy Belgium growing bolder. "But there hasn't been a Mocking Bird or a Cat Bird around here in a long time," answered Reddy Woodpecker.

Again came the muffled sobbing, followed once more by the cautioning "sh-h-h!"

"There surely is someone up in the attic," whispered Peggy. "Maybe it's a kidnaper!" suggested Billy.

"I think we'd better get out of here," murmured Judge Owl. "So do we all," cried the other Birds, and then there was a wild scramble for the window through which they entered. Every one wanted to get out at once, and the result was that they got tangled up together and blocked the way.

Peggy and Billy Belgium caught the panicky feeling, but their pride held them back. "Phooh! Who's afraid?" said Billy Belgium, but Peggy noticed that he glanced up nervously at the trapdoor which led to the attic.

"I'm not afraid," said Blue Heron, pushing into the crowd.

want to be in a place where I can get a good start if I should become afraid in a minute."

That seemed to be the way with all the Birds. They wouldn't admit that they were frightened, but they wanted to be ready to dash for safety should real danger show itself.

"Guess we'd better go outside," suggested Billy Belgium, as the Birds finally crowded through the window. "Ladies first," he gallantly added. Peggy didn't need a second invitation. She might not be really scared, but she preferred to investigate this mystery from a safe distance.

"I move that we adjourn to Birdland," hooted Judge Owl, when all were gathered in the school yard. "No," promptly answered Peggy. "Some one is crying up in that attic. They are in trouble. Maybe we can help them. It would be cowardly for us to run away without finding out."

"That's right," agreed Billy Belgium. "If it's a kidnaper we can rescue his victim."

Peggy shivered at the word kidnaper, but she found her courage coming back strong once she made up her mind she had a duty to perform.

"The safest thing is to get away while the getting is good," declared General Swallow. "That's the law of Birdland, but if you say stay, Princess Peggy, we'll stay with you."

"Thank you, faithful Birds," answered Peggy. "I wish one of you would fly to that attic window and tell us what you see."

Every Bird responded and in a moment the whole crowd was massed in front of the window.

"I see! I see!" they chorused. "What do you see?" cried Peggy. "You tell me General Swallow," she added when all started to answer at once.

"Something white all huddled up," he replied. "It's crying, whatever it is."

"I'm going to take a look," declared Billy Belgium, shinning up a tree that stood beside the school. In a minute he was on a limb opposite the window. Billy Belgium gazed through the window for a long time, while a puzzled look came over his face.

"Hello, hello in there!" he shouted. Peggy peered up anxiously, waiting for a response. Suddenly two white faces appeared at the window. Just as suddenly they vanished.

"A little girl and a little boy," exclaimed Billy Belgium. "They look as though they have fainted. I'm going in there!"

(In tomorrow's chapter Peggy and Billy Belgium hear a surprising story from the "ghosts.")
