

DUGOUT HAS ALL OF THE MODERN CONVENIENCES

Staff Home of American Army in France More Like a City House Than a Cave.

With the American Troops in France, Nov. 16.—An amazing underground shelter or dugout equipped with many luxuries is the home of the staff of one American army corps which took a prominent part in the St. Mihiel fight. It is little less than an underground city club, with offices, sleeping quarters, baths, restaurants, kitchens, electric lights, telephone and bell boys in the persons of orderlies and messengers and many other appurtenances of hotel life.

Its occupation has permitted the staff of this corps to operate in close touch with the fighting troops much more closely behind the lines than such a corps ordinarily ventures.

From the outside the place was so inconspicuous, standing about 200 yards from the road, that 99 out of 100 motorists would have driven by without seeing it at all. The one man who would have seen merely a slight elevation in the muddy plain with two or three dark holes in the ground that might have been old shell craters or anything else.

Is Bomb Proof. In reality the mud and grass covering was nothing but a concealment of a 30-foot "ceiling" of reinforced concrete, the black holes well camouflaged entrances leading down a sloping runway to the brilliance of the electrically lighted interior. So stoutly was the whole constructed that an enemy shell of big caliber would scarcely do more than chip off a piece of the top, and no aviator's bomb could ever, even hitting directly, do much damage.

Inside, parallel with the road and traversing the length of the dugout, was a wide corridor—the "main street" of the institution, in which the commanding general rubbed shoulders with the orderlies and messengers as they went from office to office. Off this main street led minor streets running to the rear and being used, for economy of space, as sleeping rooms for the enlisted men at night. Artificial ventilation provided for the constant purification of the whole dugout, and the smell throughout was clean and sweet.

Space Is Conserved.

Off the small streets, and off the big one, too, were the offices, constructed likewise for economy of space. Each was about 10 feet wide and quite deep, with a narrow table running the length of the rooms at which sat the officers and their assistants, working all the time, answering the telephone every moment or so, giving instructions and receiving reports.

Instead of having the operations department in one building, the intelligence in another, and others scattered in as many more, all were here together, in offices with walls as nearly sound-proof as possible, under a ceiling just high enough to enable a tall man to walk or stand with his stooping so close together that a moment could put one in touch with the other if necessary, yet easily far apart as far as any possible one-sided disturbance was concerned.

Kitchen Is Complete.

At the end of the big corridor was the kitchen, compact to the point of being a hothouse. When the cooks finished each meal the side streets would suddenly be transformed into a little cozy dining room, each with its long wooden table and narrow wooden benches. In less than a minute it takes to tell the general's mess was ready, the superior officer's mess and all the others. No sound could penetrate the great concrete roof, and the great bombardment that opened the St. Mihiel "show" could not be heard, as an Associated Press correspondent who was there can attest. Yet outside the building the cannon were going "great guns" and the whole night was thundering with the noise.

New York to London Air Service Is Plan for After Great War

London, Nov. 9.—"America will become within reach of England in a day and a half and the time will come when an Englishman in New York will see his own paper the morning after its publication," said Handley Page, the airplane constructor, recently.

He prophesied that immediately on the declaration of peace it would be possible to begin air service between Marseilles and London with a single stop at Paris for an overhaul and taking in gasoline. Mr. Page continued:

"Constantinople could be reached in 20 hours, Rome in 12½ hours, and Marseilles in eight," he said. "An 800-mile service could be run at a profit, both for mails and passengers, at a rate but little in excess of that at present in force."

"I base my calculations on the use of a medium-sized machine making nonstop flights of 400 miles. Each would carry 4,000 pounds of revenue-earning load. There would be first-class aerodromes at each end of the route and another in the middle. Second-class aerodromes would be provided every 100 miles."

"A minimum service of six machines each way per day could be provided for a capital of under £500,000, the annual cost would be under £200,000."

Jewish Genealogy.

In constructing their genealogical tables, the Jews reckoned wholly by males. When the line passed to the grandson through a daughter, the daughter herself was not named, but her husband was counted as the son of the maternal grandfather. This explains how Joseph, son of Jacob, who married Mary, daughter of Heli, is counted in the genealogy as Heli's son.

Every Day You Are Without A Cheney Phonograph Is So Much Pleasure Lost

IT follows, then, that a Cheney is worth more to you now than it would be a week or a month or a year later. It is like buying a household magician for a lump sum. Why not have his services for all the rest of your life instead of waiting? And you can acquire him so easily, by the

Burgess-Nash Outfit Plan

The easiest way possible to own a Cheney.

As soon as the Cheney arrives in your home you can have 100—yes, 1,000—entertainers give you of their best. Then, for the first time, Galli Curci, McCormack, Caruso, Harry Lauder, Schumann-Heink, Farrar and all the great stars become truly household words to your family circle. It is impossible to tire of such a galaxy of talent.

You turn from Sousa's crashing marches to Kreisler's plaintive violin solos, or from Pietro Deiro's wonderful solos to the exquisitely attuned voices of your favorite quartette, and you find never-failing diversion.
