Mrs. Wilson's Gowns Are Modestly Elegant

(Continued from Page One.) suits. She has too, for driving and on especially cold days, a long seal-skin coat, which was remodelled to wear on shipboard and in the colder climates of France and England. It is cut on simple straight lines, with skunk collar and cuffs.

One of her most becoming gowns is of black velvet, cut low and square both back and front. The skirt is straight with a short pointed train. The bodice has red tulle draped across one side and has angel sleeves, very long and flowing, of the same colored tulle. She wears black almost entirely before her marriage to the president; she was married in a black gown and affects black most of the time now. She has another black gown of chiffon velvet, severely simple, and one of black net trimmed with jet and turquoise ornaments.

Evening Gowns Similar. Almost all of her evening gowns are cut on the same general lines, the skirts almost all alike, straight and with pointed train, and the bodices square, soitten around the neck with tulle, the sleeves almost always tulle, and some sort of a soft belt right at the waist line. She has an evening gown of gray tulle and tulle made on those lines and a similar white one of satin and tulle, with bands of opalescents here and there on the bodice. She varies in the fans she selects for the gray and white gowns, sometimes she carries a peacock blue with her white, or pink; with the gray sometimes a gray fan and again one of the shade of the orchids. Generally speaking, her evening frocks are almost always made on a foundation of black or white, relieved with a touch of color. Her slippers and shoes are carefully chosen in keeping with her costumes on all occasions.

Although the peace table is not a festal board, the eyes of the fashion world are turned toward the women attendant thereon, who will probably influence fashions for the coming season.

THE COOTIE.

If I were a cootie (pro-ally, of course), I'd seek out the Kaiser (the war-mad dumd coos) I'd be a bum cootie if I didn't miss His imperial hide from his head to his toe. He might hide from bombs but I'd give him no show. If I were a cootie, I'd deem it my duty To thus treat the Kaiser. Ah, out! —Sergt R. T. Bowen, R. T. C.
