

Home and Friends and Peaceful Pursuits Make Very Merry Christmas

With peace hanging high on the world's Christmas tree, we will all trim our own little individual fir quite brightly. Many of our boys will be in their home this Christmas and many of them with a gift from Uncle Sam, just a piece of paper-but, oh, it means so much! Home and friends and the peaceful pursuits once more! It is for these returned victors that the girls will dress their prettiest.

They tell us that the trench eye hungers for chiffons and the soldier will want Christmas just as it was before war darkened the world. We're singing a reformed version of the old Christmas carol which swings along like this, "Then bring your curls, ye merry, merry girls. The yule tog to its wearing."

Never were our shops so filled with lustrous things and never was there such zealousness.

The satin gown seems to hold full sway. One particularly youthful model combines two tones of ruby. The apron front attached to the shoulders, leaves the back perfectly plain. The buttons are of the same glowing shade of crystal and the long tassel is made of narrow satin ribbon in the lighter shade. A cap of gray and ruby angora wool is worn with this pretty frock. Black satin is ever a favorite! We see it everywhere this year, in the tea rooms and at the matinee. A gown of such chicness we saw the other Large buttons and a double day. band of angora around the skirt gave it a Parisian look. A cunning vestee of white satin edged with a tiny band of the angora and sparkling beads of jet. The collar leans a bit toward the Medici frill wrich is predicted a great vogue next

The evening gowns this Yuletide given for the men at the K. C. nut the evening gowns this Yuletide at Fort Crook. Mrs. W. A. Hinewas just the same as the blossoms we find in our garden on a June day. Twinkling crystals trimmed the bodice and with an evening wrap of the same rosy shade and with its snug collar of gray fur the costume seemed the very embodiment of the Christmas season.

Mr. and Mrs. Ben Angell have given up their apartment in the Colonial and are moving to Los Angeles where they will make their future home.

Hundreds of women are now employed as machinists and blacksmiths in the railroad shops at Sacramento, Cal.
