He is anxiously sought by his friend "The Fool Killer."

"Tattle-tale!" Remember the scorn with which you viewed the boy who "carried tales" when you were children together, and how you fairly hissed the anathema

'tattle-tale" at him? The tattle-tale has grown up—his name is legion—he is the "Mr. Tattler" who confides all his secrets to you, and then tells yours to everyone who will listen.

If Mr. Jones stayed out late, Mr. Tattler (or perhaps Mrs. Tattler) loses no time in informing the neighbors, and does not spoil an interesting story for the sake of a few facts.

If the firm or which Mr. Tattler works has a "scoop" about ready—a plan that has been carefully thought out and developed to create more business, the moment Mr. Tattler learns of it he becomes impressed with his own importance and "confides" the news to eager ears and competitors reap the profit.

Perchance heavy investment and slow collections have placed a sound concern temporarily in a position where its salvation-depends upon loyalty and discretion on the part of its employes. Mr. Tattler hears the bookkeeper make a chance remark to and auditor and hurries out to tell everyone he meets that the ship is about to sink, and by so doing places the "bomb" under it which makes its sinking a certainty.

Society can protect itself against the thief by Burglar Insurance; against dishonest employes by Bonds; it carries Life Insurance and Fire Insurance, but as yet it has devised no means to protect itself against the tattler—hence the call for Mr. Tattler by that friend of society, "The Fool Killer."

If I gave credence to half the tales told me by "visiting tattlers," I would have to conclude that most of my competitors were about to enter bankruptcy and few of them were either honest or efficient. In justice to them, however, I must say I respect my competitors more than I do their "tattlers," because I know human

Peruna is for catarrh and catarrhal conditions in any organ or any part of the body. Whether it be catarrh of the stomach, bowels, or other organs, Peruna is just as effective as for catarrh of the head and throat. It is by encouraging a rich, pure blood supply to all parts of the body that Peruna allays the inflammation and congestion, and produces health in the mucous linings everywhere. This remedy, which for forty-five years has been the standard treatment for catarrh in all its forms, regulates the digestive organs and helps eliminate the wastes and poisons resulting from catarrhal conditions. This foetid matter may frequently find lodgment in the system and then do irreparable harm.

The experience of Mrs. Albert Huet of 264 Hackmatack St., South Manchester, Conn., is an indication of the great good which Peruna is accomplishing for the sex. She writes: "I had catarrh of the stomach, bowels and liver. I sought a cure everywhere but sad to say was finally obliged to take my bed. I wish you could understand my Catarrh in some form, not nec-essarily of the head, but in any or-ting stronger all the time."

Mrs. Huet gained in weight from 96 to 120 pounds.
Such a story carries a message of hope and happiness to every person, man or woman, suffering from catarrh. Peruna is sold everywhere.
