Where Are Cheers of Yesterday?

I never meet a soldier on the street, But that I feel a quickening sharp beat Of heart's blood rising to a flush in shame To think so little welcome meets him home again. Here we have all been living well, and free, To exacise our will and shape our destiny, While he has been a servant, without pain, Hence why so little welcome home again?

Where are the bands, the crowds, the cheers, Where are the bands, the crowds, the cheers,
To balance those some months ago, when tears
Were in our every eye for those
Who marched away in soldier's clothes?
Whate'er the reason, brief their fame,
They daily come, the wounded, sound, and lame,
Yet find they not that glad refrain
We promised as their welcome home again.

Where are the cheers of yesterday, To hail our beroes on their homeward way?
